THE LAST OF THE OLD MERCHANTMEN.

No. 1.

COMMERCIAL HISTORY OF SALEM.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

SALEM was settled by a class of men who were different in several respects from those of the other towns of the Massachusetts Bay colony. They were sea-faring, having been engaged in fishing at Cape Ann for five years. The maritime advantages of the situation of Salem undoubtedly attracted them thither, and resulted in the commercial activity of the town in later years. At the very beginning of Endicott's government here he was directed by the home company to send to England as return cargoes, "staves, sarsaparilla, sumack, sturgeon and other fish and beaver." The waters of the harbor and rivers contained immense quantities of fish, and for more than a century they were the staple export, Winter island being the headquarters of the fish trade. Even as late as the present century, salmon swam the North river in such numbers that they constituted the main article of animal food of the dwellers on its banks; and the indentures of apprentices contained a clause providing that they should not be compelled to eat salmon more than three times each week.

About 1640, vessels were sailed to Antigua and Barbadoes, some of the Leeward Islands and the large islands of the West Indies, the Bermudas, Virginia and England; and in 1644 Josselyn wrote that in Salem there "are many rich merchants." Within the next twenty-five years, trade was extended to Spain, France and Holland.

The great majority of vessels then engaged in commerce from Salem were ketches, measuring from twenty to forty tons burthen, and manned by four, five or six men each. In 1688, there was only one ship, her tonnage being one hundred and thirty tons. In 1698, Salem had on the water one ship of eighty tons and another of two hundred, one bark, three sloops and twenty ketches.

Higginson wrote of the trade here in 1700 as follows: "Dry, merchantable codfish for the markets of Spain, Portugal and the Straits, refuse fish, lumber, horses and provisions for the West Indies. Returns made directly to England are sugar, molasses, cotton, wool, logwood and Brasiletto-wood, for which we depend on the West Indies. Our own produce, a considerable quantity of whale and fish-oil, whalebone, furs, deer, elk, and bear-skins are annually sent to England. We have much shipping here and rates are low."

Commerce was continued in similar lines and with but little increase to the beginning of the Revolution. With the exception of Boston and New York, Beverly, Marblehead and Salem were the principal commercial ports of the province, having most of the shipping.

The patriots of the colonies, without ships of war, found themselves at issue with the most powerful maritime nation of the world. Boston and New York were occupied and crippled by the enemy, and the success of the Americans was early believed to lie in the hands of the patriotic merchants of Salem bay. Devotion to the cause of independence was nowhere more extensive or truer than in the hearts of the merchants of Salem, and those who sailed their ships over the ocean. Broad-minded and generous, the owners recognized the exigency of the times and turned their vessels into privateers, arming them with cannon; and their gallant crews volunteered to man them. Out upon the deep they sailed, with hearts of courage and daring, to meet in mortal combat the powerful navy of England.

Not only did they use the vessels already built, but the merchants had larger and better ones constructed, equipped and manned for this very service. During the war more than one hundred and fifty-eight vessels were thus sent out from Salem. They carried upward of two thousand guns in all, averaging about fourteen each, and were manned by several thousand seamen. They took four hundred and forty-five prizes, an average of nearly three to each vessel. The story of these privateers upon the ocean is a very important, and the most interesting, fascinating and romantic part of the history of the struggle for independence. The secluded conflicts at sea, between single vessels, had few witnesses, and little, compared with the amount of knowledge we have of the battles fought on land, is therefore known of the history of the capture of these four hundred and forty-five prizes.

Little commerce in the way of trade had been carried on during the seven years of war, and on the return of peace the merchants found themselves possessed of many swift-sailing vessels larger than any they had used prior to the Revolution. They were too large to be profitably employed in domestic commerce or in the short voyages to their hitherto visited European and other ports. The merchants determined to visit new and more distant countries, and begin trade with their peoples.

Many hundred seamen were idle, as they would accept no employment but that which was compatible with the spirit they had imbibed during the seven strange years that had just come to an end, leaving them stranded. They had sailed the Spanish main, and had had frequent meetings with the buccaneers of the ocean for years. Perilous voyages were the most attractive. Most of the sailors were still young, and full of life and daring. The prospect of voyages to distant and unknown countries was fascinating to them, and when the merchants announced their intention of opening up trade with the remote parts of the globe there was no lack of seamen.

The snow-white sails of the merchantships of Salem were soon seen in every water of the then known world, and Salem became famous in the uttermost parts, its name becoming as widely known as that of America.

Many of the voyages of the merchantships were not less exciting and dangerous than the experiences of the privateers in the Revolution. The history of the period is crowded with incidents of daring and adventure in unknown seas and in ports never before visited by Americans, encounters with pirates and tribes of cruel and treacherous savages, who were ready to commit any atrocity for plunder, contests with the armed ships of France and England, imprisonment among the Algerines and in the dungeons of France and Spain. Now and then Salem crews fell victims to the pirates and cruel Malays. Even the most romantic imaginations fail to conceive the parallel of those times.

It has already been said that the seamen were young, but it will not be learned from that statement alone how very youthful some of them were. When the first vessel to the East Indies set sail from Salem, neither the captain nor his mates were out of their teens; yet, with imperfect mathematical instruments, and without charts except of their own making, they carried through coral reefs and along strange shores ship and cargo safely to their destination. The importance of the position of these boys did not alone lie in the navigation of the vessel. They had the selling of the outward cargo, and the purchase of another to bring home with them. The whole financial success of the voyage depended upon them, as there was no communication with the owners during the year and a half covered by the voyage, and no news of them received at home until they came sailing back again. The telegraphic cable long ago destroyed the romantic interest which the mystery of silence wove around these trips.

Derby street, the great commercial thoroughfare of the town, was filled with the bustle of business. Vessels crowded at the wharves, some having their cargoes of silk from India, tea from China, pepper from Sumatra, coffee from Arabia, spices from Batavia, gum-copal from Zanzibar, and hides from Africa, removed to the warehouses on the wharves, and others were being laden with American goods for the foreign trade.

At every lounging place, on every street corner and about the doors of the numerous sailor boarding houses, were seamen fresh from Eastern countries, and others about to sail thither, having all the peculiarities of the true rover of the seas.

The sail-makers with their curious thimbles fastened to the palms of their hands, sat on the smooth floor of their lofts busily stitching the great sheets of white canvass that should carry many a gallant vessel through storm and tempest to seas before unplowed by American keels. The shops of the ship-chandlers were also busy places, as well as the shop of the old maker of mathematical instruments, with his swinging sign of a quadrant. The shops and stores were full of strange and unique articles, brought from distant lands. Parrots screamed and monkeys and other small animals from foreign forests gamboled at will in the back shops. Suggestions of foreign lands met the vision at every turn. The collection of rare and unique curiosities which constitute the East India Marine museum was one result of these voyages.

The ship America, Capt. Jacob Crowninshield of Salem, master and owner, brought home from Bengal, in 1796, the first elephant that was ever seen in the United States.

The maritime section of the town was well worth visiting. Salem was one of the principal depots for the distribution of foreign merchandise. For instance, in the year 1800, more than eight million pounds of sugar alone was imported and sold to traders from various sections of the country. The streets were alive with teams loaded with goods. Draft wagons and drays came from long distances, sometimes more than a hundred miles, for this was long before the period of railroads, and all merchandise had to be transported overland in this arduous and tedious manner.

In the taverns, teamsters from many parts of Northwestern New England were ever to be found on chilly evenings sitting around the hearth-fire, discussing politics or current news, or becoming cheerful over frequent potations of New England rum, which was then manufactured in Salem in great quantities.

The first new trade opened, after the Revolution, was with Russia. In 1784, the bark Light Horse, commanded by Capt. Buffington from Salem, opened the American trade at St. Petersburg. The trade with that country became extensive, but greatly declined after the embargo. The last entry in Salem of a cargo from Archangel was in 1820, from Cronstadt in 1836, and from St. Petersburg in 1843.

The Cape of Good Hope trade was also opened in 1784. The first voyage was made in the Grand Turk, a fast-sailing ship of three hundred tons. It was built by Elias Hasket Derby, in 1781, as a privateer, and carried twenty-two guns. In 1784, Mr. Derby dispatched the vessel, under command of Capt. Jonathan Ingersoll, on the first voyage from Salem to the Cape, the exportation being New England rum, and the return cargo Granada rum.

The next year (1785), Mr. Derby opened the trade with China by sending to Canton the Grand Turk, which was then commanded by Capt. Ebenezer West.

He there competed with the European syndicates of merchants for the native trade.

The ship Grand Turk was also the first New England vessel to open trade with the Dutch of the Isle of France. This was in 1787. Sugar was the principal article of Dutch exportation. In 1794, the ship Aurora brought from there a cargo of four hundred and twenty-four thousand and thirty-four pounds of sugar, it being consigned to William Gray.

The East India trade was also opened by Mr. Derby, in 1788, by the ship Atlantic, which was commanded by his son. This was the first vessel to display the American ensign at Surat, Bombay and Calcutta. The next year, he imported the first cargo of Bombay cotton brought to this country. In 1798, the ship Belisarius brought a cargo of ten thousand, seven hundred and sixty-seven pounds of sugar and one hundred and eighteen thousand, two hundred and fifteen pounds of coffee from Calcutta and the Isle of France. In 1803, the ship Lucia brought from Calcutta a cargo of sugar, indigo and cheroots, on which the duty was $24,001.08. In 1805, the ship Argo brought a cargo of sugar, from the same port, on which the duty was $32,799.47. In 1812, a duty of $51,526.33 was paid on the cargo of the Restitution from Calcutta. The Calcutta trade was afterwards carried on principally by Joseph Peabody, by the famous ship George, which made twenty-one voyages to Calcutta, and who paid $651,743.32 duties on its cargoes.

The first American vessel to open trade with Batavia was the Salem brig Sally, Benjamin Webb, master, in 1796, who purchased of the people there pepper and sugar. Salem vessels were the first to display the American flag at the Island of Java, near Sumatra, in the Indian ocean. The ship Margaret, Samuel Derby, master, was the first (in 1802) Salem vessel, and second American vessel to visit Japan; and the ship Franklin of Boston, commanded by Capt. James Devereux of Salem, was the first American vessel to trade with Japan, though commercial intercourse was not opened between the two countries until half a century later.

Salem merchants sent the first vessel that ever sailed direct from this country to Sumatra, and the first to bring a cargo of pepper from that island. This trade originated from the discovery, by Capt. Jonathan Carnes of Salem, at the port of Bencoolen, who was there in 1793, that pepper grew wild on the northwestern coast of Sumatra. He sailed for Jonathan Peele, the merchant, who, upon the discovery of Capt. Carnes, built the schooner Rajah and sent him in it to Sumatra for a cargo of pepper in 1795. He took, for the purpose of trade, a cargo of brandy, gin, iron, tobacco and salmon, and in 1796 brought back the first cargo of pepper to be imported into this country in bulk. The cargo sold at seven hundred per cent. profit. The merchants were greatly excited over Mr. Peele's success, and endeavored to learn where the pepper had been obtained, but it was kept a secret for several years. The cargoes of pepper sometimes contained as much as six hundred tons.

The ship Eliza, James Cook, master, brought into the port of Salem, from Sumatra, a cargo of one million, twelve thousand, one hundred and forty-eight pounds of pepper, on which a duty of $66,903.90 was paid. At one time the trade with Sumatra was almost entirely carried on by Salem merchants, and a large proportion of the pepper consumed was obtained at, and through the port of Salem, which was the distributing point for that article to all countries. Cargoes of pepper were regularly brought to Salem from Sumatra until 1846. Salem vessels were at Sumatra for the last time in 1860; and the last American vessel that visited that coast was commanded by a Salem captain. This was in 1867. Since then there has been no direct trade between that place and the United States.

The Manilla trade was opened in 1796. The ship Astrea, of Salem, Henry Prince, master, in that year entered the harbor of Manilla, the capital city of the Philippine Islands, situated on the island of Luzon, and returned to Salem with a cargo of seventy-five thousand pounds of sugar, sixty-three thousand, six hundred and ninety-five pounds of pepper and twenty-nine thousand seven hundred and sixty-seven pounds of indigo, the import duty at Salem being $24,020. The ship St. Paul was almost as famous in the Manilla trade as was the ship George in the Calcutta trade. The last entry in Salem from Manilla was the bark Dragon, in 1858, with a cargo of hemp.

The Mocha trade was opened in 1798 by the ship Recovery, of the port of Salem, Joseph Ropes, master. It was the first American vessel to display the American flag in that region of the world. The natives were amazed at the vessel, with its, to them, strange shape and rig, and large size. The ship Franklin, in 1808, brought from there a cargo of five hundred and thirty-two thousand, three hundred and sixty-five pounds of coffee, consigned to Joseph Peabody, on which was paid a duty of $26,618.25.

Trade with all those distant shores was firmly established and flourishing at its height, when, in 1808, the embargo was placed upon our seaports. The whole trade was thus suddenly stopped, in some instances never to be re-opened, and in all its branches to be pursued with less vigor and in a less degree.

The trade in wine and brandy with Spain and Portugal, which had continued for a century was wholly stopped by the embargo, the last entry being from Bilboa, in 1809.

Of the trade with all the other principal European ports, which began prior to the War of 1812, the last entry from Bordeaux occurred in 1815, from Copenhagen in 1816, from Amsterdam in 1823, from Hamburg in 1828, from Rotterdam in 1834, from Antwerp in 1836, and from Gottenburg in 1837.

The Mediterranean trade existed principally before that war, the last entry, with a cargo of wine, brandy and soap, from Marseilles being in 1833, and the last from Leghorn in 1841. Trade with Messina ceased in 1831.

Among the places early traded at by the colonists, the last entry from the West Indies was from Havana in 1854. The last entry in Salem from the Rio Grande was made in 1870.

The South American trade, which also began early, finally ended in 1877, the last entry in Salem from Para occurring in 1861, the cargo consisting of rubber, hides, cocoa, coffee and castana nuts. The trade with Montevideo, in hides and horns, which began in 1811, also ended in 1861. The sugar trade with Pernambuco ended in 1841. Among the places of South America visited by Salem merchants were Guayaquil, Lima, Patagonia, Rio Janeiro, Surinam and Valparaiso.

Trade on the west coast of Africa, which began soon after the close of the Revolution, by conveying thither New England rum, gun-powder and tobacco, closed in 1873.

The Feejee Islands trade was first opened in 1811 in the period between the embargo and the war, by the bark Active, Capt. William P. Richardson. Salem was a name familiar to the cannibals of those islands during the first half of this century, as well as to the savages of Africa and Madagascar, being the synonym for all the rest of the world. The trade continued as late as 1854, when the bark Dragon brought from there a cargo of eleven hundred and seventy bales of hemp.

After the close of the war, the Salem merchants attempted to supplement the unparalleled commercial record of the port by opening trade with several new places.

The first American vessel to trade at Madagascar was the Salem brig Beulah, Charles Forbes, master, in 1820. In 1827, Salem merchants extended this trade to Zanzibar. The Salem vessels were the first to trade there as at Sumatra and Madagascar. Gum-copal was its staple article of export. The last cargo to arrive at Salem from Zanzibar entered in 1870.

The Australian trade was commenced in 1832, by the Salem ship Tybee, Charles Millett, master, at Sydney, and that was the first American vessel to enter Australian ports. The trade came to an end in 1837.

Considerable trade was carried on with Nova Scotia from about 1840 to 1857. Since that time there has been but little. For about ten years, from 1837 to 1847, Salem was engaged in the whale fisheries.

The whole aspect of the old maritime section of Salem is now changed. Many of the old shops on Derby street remain, dingy and worn, and ware-houses have been transformed into coal-houses, coal being now the principal article of importation. Mansions of the old merchants are to be found around Washington square, many of them elegant and large, but those that remain in the old commercial section are dilapidated and changed. The influence of the energy, enterprise, fearlessness and far-sightedness of the old-time merchants will, however, remain for centuries.

The engraving at the beginning of this sketch is that of the ship Mindoro, the only survivor of the full-rigged merchant ships of Salem, lying at the historic Derby wharf in Salem harbor. It was built in Boston in 1864 by John Taylor for Messrs. Pickman & Silsbee, merchants of Salem, by whom it has always been owned. It measures one hundred and sixty-seven feet in length, thirty-five feet in breadth, and twenty-three and one-half feet in depth. Its gross tonnage measurement is one thousand and twenty-one and ninety-five one-hundredths tons, and the net, nine hundred and seventy and fifty-seven one-hundredths tons. Its first commander was Capt. Charles H. Allen, jr., and his successors, Captains Reynolds, Bray, Gardner, Beadle, Hutchinson, Powers, Luscomb and Creelman, respectively. It has sailed in many waters, carrying cargoes to and from China and the East Indies, Australia, Cape Town, San Francisco, etc. It has now been lying at the wharf for a year, having in all probability made its last port.

NEW ENGLAND'S DEAD.

New England's dead! New England's dead!
 On every hill they lie;
 On every field of strife, made red
 By bloody victory.
 Each valley, where the battle poured
 Its red and awful tide,
 Beheld the brave New England sword
 With slaughter deeply dyed.
 Their bones are on the northern hill,
 And on the southern plain,
 By brook and river, lake and rill,
 And by the roaring main.
 The land is holy where they fought,
 And holy where they fell;
 For by their blood that land was bought,
 The land they loved so well.
 Then glory to that valiant band,

THROAT DISTEMPER IN HAVERHILL, 1735-7.

The throat distemper which prevailed throughout the County of Essex in 1735, '6 and '7 so disastrously among the children was particularly fatal in Haverhill. From Nov. 17, 1735, to Dec. 31, 1737, two hundred and fifty-six children, most of them under ten years of age, died in that town from this disease, and in the whole county the deaths of about fourteen hundred children and also a considerable number of adults are estimated to have thus resulted. This estimate is undoubtedly low, as scarcely a cemetery of that time can be visited without seeing the little gravestones bearing dates of this period, and to one accustomed to examining old burying grounds the general appearance of each stone betrays the fact that the child buried beneath it was a victim of the distemper. It would seem that some gravestone maker must have supplied the people of the county with the stones during this period, the demand for them being so great that variation in design was not to be entertained.

In the old parish in Haverhill the number that died during the period named was eighty-eight; in the west parish, sixty-two; and in the north parish one hundred and six. Two hundred and ten were under the age of ten; thirty between ten and fifteen; eleven between fifteen and twenty; three between twenty and thirty; one between thirty and forty; and one more than forty years. From Nov. 17 to Dec. 31, 1735, ten died; in 1736, one hundred and sixteen; and in 1737 one hundred and thirty.

Rev. John Brown, who was then settled in the ministry at Haverhill, and who lost three children by the distemper, prepared an address to the people of Haverhill, particularly to the bereaved parents, Aug. 14, 1737, prefixing to it "A Brief Relation" of thirty-four "Comfortable and Remarkable Instances of Death" among the children. This was published in Boston by Daniel Henchman, the following year, in a pamphlet of ninety-two duodecimo pages, which is to-day a rare book. Most of the material for this article has been taken from it, and thus has a peculiar interest.

The names of the thirty-four children, whom Mr. Brown cites as showing extraordinary spiritual insight and Christian resignation, and data concerning them which is worthy of being preserved, are as follows : —

Lydia White, died April 6, 1736, aged eight. She was sick about twenty-four hours, having a violent fever with the distemper. She had been a pleasing child, fond of instruction. Her brother died also a few days later.

Eunice Emerson, died June 13, 1736, aged fifteen. Though she had symptoms of the distemper, it was not certain that she died of it. She bled to death, having been troubled with bleeding before.

Whitely McHard, died at one o'clock in the morning of July 12, 1736, aged four.

John McHard, aged seven, brother to the preceding, died at noon on the same day, surviving him only eleven hours. Two other children of the family died before the month had passed, on the same day. This was the first family in the town to be deprived of all their children by this disease. They had another son born to them during the next year, however.

Daniel Chase, died July 28, 1736, aged seven years and eight days. A brother, aged four, was sick in the bed with him, one at the head and the other at the foot. The younger died, and Daniel survived him an hour and a half. They were enclosed in the same coffin. This family lost five children.

Sarah Chase, died Aug. 3, 1736, aged nine. She was sister to the next preceding. She was a very tender hearted and quiet child of few words. Her younger sister Molly was also very sick when she died.

Thomas Shepard, died Aug. 28, 1736, aged eleven. He was sick several weeks, as was his eldest sister, also, who lived.

David Hassaltine, died Aug. 29, 1736, aged seven.

Ruth Merrill, died Sept. 9, 1736, aged twelve. Her younger brother died a short time before herself.

Samuel Gatchel, died Sept. 20, 1736, aged twelve. He was the eldest of a family of six children, four of whom died with the distemper. He and his brother next to him had been sick of the disease in the preceding spring, and had apparently recovered, but some hard bunches in the throat remained, finally proving fatal. He had a three year old brother, named Jesse, who had died with the distemper. The family was poor, and both parents were alive.

Anne Gatchel, died Sept. 11, 1736, aged six. She was a sister of Samuel above. She was asked if she was willing to die, and answered, "Yes, I'm willing to die to go to my Aunt Johnson and my brother Jesse." This Aunt Johnson was an exemplary Christian, and very much loved, and was the only person above the age of forty years who died of the distemper in the town.

Daniel Gatchel, died Sept. 14, 1736, aged ten. He was a brother to the preceding. He had the whooping cough with the disease.

Joseph Richards, died Sept. 18, 1736, aged eight. A younger brother named Abraham died before him.

Elizabeth Davis, died Sept. 19, 1736, aged twenty-two. She was a quiet young lady, and lived out. She had a sister, whom she requested, the day before her death, to wash certain articles which would be needed for her interment, designating the sheets and head-cloths she desired to be laid out with.

Martha Brown, died Oct. 5, 1736, aged fourteen. She was a daughter of Rev. John Brown. She was taken sick Sept. 30th. She had an elder sister and a younger brother, and other brothers and sisters. Early in the morning of the day she died she said to a girl friend of about her own age, Hannah W——, "This is the last time, Hannah, that you will ever see me in this world. I shall be with Betty Bailey before night." Betty Bailey was a loving companion of Pattee's (as she was familiarly called), aged fifteen, who with her sister Molly Bailey, aged thirteen, were taken from the family of Colonel Bailey. Betty died of the scarlet fever May 5, 1736, and Molly of the throat distemper May 11, 1736. Pattee died at about eight o'clock in the evening, having considered the date of her funeral, and reminded some of her friends to take a lock of her hair to remember her by. She sat up and was dressed, and ate a raw apple an hour or two before she died.

Nathaniel Brown, died Oct. 21, 1736, aged twelve. "Nattie" was a brother to Martha Brown above, and son of Rev. John Brown.

Sarah Eatton, died Oct. 17, 1736, aged four.

Mary Merrill, died Oct. 27, 1736, aged fourteen. Three other children of the family died with the distemper.

Elizabeth Bradbury, died Nov. 15, 1736, aged six. She gave away her clothing to some poor people whom she thought in most need.

Sarah Chase, died Nov. 17, 1736, aged fourteen. Her younger brother also died and was buried in the same coffin with her.

Obadiah Bradley, died Nov. 26, 1736, aged thirteen. He was sick three days. His younger sister died the day before his own death. He had a brother David, who died the year before. He had also a sister Molly, who was next to him in the family. He gave his playthings away before he died. His father could not see him, "being confined from home." His grandmother was apparently living with the family. All the five children of the family died of the distemper.

Sarah Corlis, died Dec. 30, 1736, aged nineteen.

Mary Hasseltine, died Jan. 2, 1736-7, aged nineteen. She had a weak constitution, and was much given to the reading of books. Her mind was much occupied with religious thoughts all through her youth, and some time before her sickness with the distemper she was wont to say that she had not long to live. The night before her death, in answer to a question from her father, she said that she expected to see in Heaven her grandfather and her Aunt Betty ("good old Deacon Hasseltine and his daughter, a Christian of singular attainments").

Susanna Wilson, died Jan. 26, 1736-7, aged seven. She had an elder sister.

Lydia Hasseltine, died Jan. 28, 1736-7, aged nine. She was a sister of Mary Hasseltine mentioned above.

Sarah Whittaker, died Feb. 22, 1736-7, aged seven. She was the eldest of a family of four children, who all died the same week, the three latter being buried together. The names of the two middle children were Mary and Samuel. The youngest child was two years old.

Susannah Emerson, died Mar. 3, 1736-7, aged fifteen. She was always a sober, timorous little girl. She had a sister Judith living in Newbury, and also a brother who were older than she.

Susannah Emerson, died Sept. 2, 1737, aged ten. Her grandmother was present at her death.

Martha Kimbal, died Sept. 13, 1737, aged eleven. She had sisters and brothers, one of whom was named Benjamin. Her sister Abigail died on the same day, at the age of five.

John Appleton White, died Sept. 28, 1737, aged five. "An only son, and a first born." He had a little sister.

Hannah Webster, died Sept. 30, 1737, aged ten. Her brother Joseph and sisters Mercy and Sarah had died. She was the last. She said to her mother the day before her death: "All the rest are gone: I have been to visit all their graves, and now I am going myself. I don't know what you will do, mother, but if I should be taken away you must not be too much cast down. 'Twas God that gave me to you, and if he take me away you must not be too much concerned. You must not do as some others that have lost all their children; who are afraid to stay in the house, afraid to be in the dark alone; you must hire some little girl to live with you if you are afraid."

Nathaniel Bradley, died Oct. 4, 1737, aged sixteen. He was a dutiful boy. He had sisters, one of whom had married — H—th and had a child that was dying when he was sick. His aunt G—le was present in his sickness. He had sisters named Nabbe and Betty, and one who had died eight years before named Ruth. He also had brothers who were older than himself, one of whom was named Isaac.

James Holgate, died Dec. 26, 1737, aged five. He was the last of five children that died of throat distemper in the family, all dying in a little more than a week's time. The names of two of the other children were Judith and Benjamin.

Biography, Genealogy, and Antiquities of Essex County, Massachusetts.

Essex County is the most historic county in America, and the parent of hundreds of towns and cities in various sections of the United States and British Provinces. Its settlement began in 1623, and all of its towns and cities were settled in that century.

The principal object of this magazine is to preserve the history and genealogy of the county and to bring into ready use the records which are unindexed and almost inaccessible, those that are in private as well as public custody. These include admissions to and dismissions from the churches, baptisms, births, marriages, deaths, intentions of marriages, gravestone inscriptions, old newspaper news-items, advertisements and obituary notices, parish records and tax lists, town-meeting records and tax lists, probate records and original wills and other papers on file, deeds, civil and criminal court records, proprietors' records, colonial, provincial, and state records, Revolutionary and other soldiers' muster rolls, etc., Bible records, account books, old letters, commissions, interleaved almanacs, diaries, journals, etc. Seven-eighths of the public records are not indexed, and none of them have complete indexes of names. A vast amount of hidden historical and genealogical material is thus brought into ready use.

The literary portion of the magazine will consist of biographies, genealogies, sketches of local history, churches and old homesteads, of early commerce, education and industries, ancient customs, etc.

The illustrations will consist of houses, churches, maps, portraits, autographs, coats-of-arms, gravestones, ancient furniture, articles of domestic use, apparel, etc.

The material which the editor has been for twenty years collecting for a genealogical dictionary of the county, down to the year 1800, is being published in the form of genealogies. It includes the Ipswich Hammatt Papers and the Essex County part of Savage's Genealogical Dictionary.

The early wills of the county are also being printed, verbatim et literatim, in the order of their probate.

The records of old Norfolk County, which existed from 1643 to 1679, and included all towns north of the Merrimac River at that period, will be published. The towns of Dover, Portsmouth, Exeter, Hampton, etc., were then included in that county. The records consist of births, marriages, deaths, deeds, wills, inventories, etc., and have been almost inaccessible and their existence known but to few.

The support and co-operation of every person is needed, by subscription as well as general interest.

OLD NORFOLK COUNTY RECORDS.

ALL the territory of old Norfolk county was included in the original grant of August 10, 1622, to Capt. John Mason and Sir Ferdinando Gorges by the Plymouth Council in England, established by a royal charter "for the planting, ruling, ordering, and governing of New-England, in America," the territory thus granted being named Laconia.

The next year, a fishing station was established on the Piscataqua river at a place afterward included within the town of Dover. The leaders in this settlement were two brothers, Edward and William Hilton, who had been fishmongers in London.

Rev. John Wheelwright and four others purchased of the Indians the territory of Laconia in 1629; but the English authorities disregarded his title, and later in the year Captain Mason obtained from the Plymouth Council a new patent of the territory, naming it New Hampshire.

Portsmouth was established at the same time as Dover, and Exeter soon after.

The patent of the Massachusetts Bay Colony extended northward to the Merrimac river, but by a peculiar construction of the grant it was claimed that the line extended many miles north of the present boundary. The Bay colony sought to hold the territory of original Hampton, Haverhill and Salisbury by colonization the first and last in 1638, and Haverhill two years later.

For several years Dover, Exeter and Portsmouth had distinct and independent governments. It was deemed desirable to place these towns under the protection of the Bay colony, and April 14, 1641, by agreement, Dover and Portsmouth were annexed to Massachusetts, which was to have, by the terms of the contract, "jurisdiction of government of the said people, dwelling or abiding within the limits of both the said patents." Exeter was admitted as a party to this agreement in September, 1642.

May 10, 1643, Massachusetts Bay was divided into counties, all the towns north of the Merrimac river being constituted the county of Norfolk. Dover had been called Coheco, and included the present towns of Durham and Stratham and city of Dover. Portsmouth was then known as Strawberry-bank, and included the present towns of Greenland, New Castle, Newington, Portsmouth and part of Rye. Exeter then included Brentwood, Epping, Exeter, Fremont, Newmarket and South Newmarket. Hampton included Danville, Hampton, Hampton Falls, Kensington, Kingston, East Kingston, North Hampton and parts of Rye and Seabrook. Salisbury, at first called Colchester, included the present towns of Amesbury, Merrimac, and Salisbury, in Massachusetts, and Newton, South Hampton and part of Seabrook, in New Hampshire. Haverhill included Haverhill, Methuen and the northern part of Lawrence, in Massachusetts, and Atkinson, Hampstead, Plaistow, and part of Salem, in New Hampshire.

The county was divided into two court jurisdictions, Dover and Portsmouth forming one, and the remaining towns the other, Salisbury becoming the shire town of the latter. The records, abstracts of which are begun to be published herewith, are those of the latter jurisdiction, though Dover and Portsmouth share in them to some extent.

Jan. 22, 1679-80, New Hampshire became a royal province, and the four northern towns were taken from the county.

Only the original towns of Haverhill and Salisbury were now left of the county, and Feb. 4, 1679-80, the General Court added them to Essex county for court purposes, but permitted the records of deeds of land to be continued. Deeds were recorded there as late as 1714, and not only of land in those towns but in various parts of the county.

In August, 1737, the line dividing the states was settled three miles north of the Merrimac river, and parallel thereto, the exact location being fixed in 1741. All the territory north of this line was added to New Hampshire.

A map has been prepared, and is herewith presented, showing the towns of Norfolk county in 1643. The x marks designate the site of the first settlements in the region. The map is original, and will be of great assistance in locating land mentioned in the conveyances which follow. These abstracts include all names of persons and facts of historical value.

THE OLD STONE WALLS.

Who were they—the builders
Of the many gray old walls
That checker all New England o'er,
Where'er the vision falls?
They part the hills and valleys,
The meadows and the plains,
And journey with us as we go Through woods and shady lanes.

Mile after mile of gray stone wall
Are left until our day;
But the active, busy builders,
We wonder who were they?
Moss-grown, their work is left behind,—
'Twas neatly done and well;
But years ago the builders
Vanished from hill and dell.

EARLY FENCES.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

Fences often exist today to designate boundary lines; but in the earliest days of our settlements they were probably never constructed for that purpose, unless the three-rail fence erected between the towns of Newbury and Rowley, in 1649, was such an instance. The earliest fences were for protection from the Indians and the larger and more ferocious animals of the forest; the next, to keep both domestic and wild animals from the cultivated crops of the settlers; and the later, to restrain the various kinds of cattle of the settlers from straying into the forest and elsewhere. These fences were all made for the purposes to which they were applied, and were often uncouth and rough. Ornamented fences belong to a still later period, when settlements had acquired some degree of affluence.

Each farmer had to build and maintain his fences when they were erected on or around his individual lots of land; but the common pastures, with their many owners, early demanded some rule or authority by which the fence around them would be built and kept in order during the season of pasturage by all the owners; and in 1633 it was provided that each owner of a common pasture should build and support such part of the fence as was in proportion to his interest in the pasture; certain sections representing such portions being marked off. These were usually the early two-railed fences. Officers were appointed to examine into the case of any delinquent, with power to levy and collect fines. In 1643, the regulation of common fences was left wholly to the respective towns.

The law in relation to fences around corn fields was peculiar, presumably on account of the necessity of preserving the corn for the sustenance of the colonists. The owner of the corn field was obliged to maintain a sufficient fence around it. July 2, 1633, it was ordered by the General Court, "that if any corne fence shalbe by the inhabitants of the towne iudged insufficient, & the owner thereof forbear mending of it more than 2 dayes after warneing giuen, the inhabitants shall mend the said fence, & the corne of the owner of the said fence shalbe liable to pay the charges of the mending thereof." The fence had to be sufficient to keep out hogs as well as cattle. In 1637, the law was passed making it incumbent upon owners of corn fields to first show that the fence through which unruly cattle came into the field was sufficient and in order before damages for injuries done to the crops could be recovered. In Topsfield, in 1667, such fences were ordered to consist of five rails, "well placed," and be up by April 20th.

The earliest roads were foot paths, and were so ill-defined that they were not regarded in fencing pastures and fields in the earliest days. Later, in the more thickly settled portions, where they were more defined, carts having come into use, and travel was more common and extensive, fences across these ways were found to be very inconvenient; and in the villages they were fenced on either side. In Rowley, this was ordered to be done as early as 1649. But outside the villages roads remained encumbered by fences, in many places, until this century; though bars and the more convenient gate were found at the crossings.

Oct 14, 1685, the General Court passed a law that whoever broke down any fence or stone wall, or lay open any gates, bars or locks, unless under claim of right, should pay a fine and the damages thereby occasioned.

Persons were chosen in the various towns to look after fences to see that they were kept up, and to have general oversight of them. There was at first no name attached to the office, the incumbent being called "fence viewer," "overseer to view fences," etc. In 1653 a law was enacted which gave this authority to the selectmen of towns, with power to levy fines upon delinquents. Our modern office of fence viewer is founded upon the Province law, passed Dec 1, 1693, which authorizes two or more fence viewers to be chosen in each town at the annual meeting. The statute also established legal fences. They were to be made four feet high, of five rails, or boards, or four, if equivalent to five; also, stone walls, brooks, rivers, ponds and creeks were to be deemed sufficient fences.

In early times fences were valued so highly, not only for their use, but for their cost, that in most of the conveyances of improved lands in Essex county they were particularly mentioned almost to the time of the Revolution.

The earliest fence was the palisade built near the house to keep the Indians and large and more ferocious animals away. This consisted of long sticks, called pales, with pointed tops, driven into the ground, leaving about eight feet above the earth, and touching one another, in a continuous row around the house. As villages began to be formed in some instances a high stone-wall took the place of the palisade around the churches, as at Topsfield in 1676, while the palisade about houses was early discontinued.

Where fences were used in early times merely for keeping cattle within certain limits, they were of the simplest construction. The earliest of these was the flimsy two-rail or pole fence, which was made by driving stakes into the ground x form, and laying the lower rails or poles in the crotches thus formed; and then driving other stakes above the rails x form in such a way that rails or poles could be laid above the first, as shown in the engraving.

The brush fence is about as ancient as the two-pole fence, and has passed away first in our county. Some one has said that, "According to an unwritten law, a brush fence must be a rod wide, with no specification as to its height." In and under the brush fence all sorts of living creatures,—beast, bird, and reptile,— have made their homes. In building or piling a brush fence the small trees along its line were lopped down, but not entirely severed from the stump, and made to fall in one direction lengthwise of the fence. Other trees were added to give it the height and width required. This was a very effective barrier.

The fence next to be built by our forefathers was a log fence. This was one of the most substantial of fences, but was only erected where there was a great amount of timber at hand. The great logs, generally of pine, were laid straight, overlapping a little at the ends, on which were placed horizontally the short cross-pieces, which upheld the logs next above. It was usually built three logs high, and formed an almost solid wooden wall. From behind the log and brush fences, the prowling Indian shot the settler as he tilled his field, or long watched the lonely cabin before he surprised its defenceless inmates.

Where stones were plentiful and timber and poles scarce, stone walls were built as early as the seventeenth century. They proved the most enduring and in every way satisfactory. In spite of their being more or less frost-flung, they remain a picturesque and sufficient barrier, and will so remain until they sink beneath the surface of the ground. Often the stones of the wall were taken from the field, where it was built, in the course of tillage. There seems almost to have been a stone age in New England history, when stone was the material most frequently employed for fence building. Sometimes a single stone wall can be found stretching away in a straight line over hill and through valley for miles. In some localities it would seem as if every field and pasture and garden were bordered with it. The great amount of stone wall that remains attests the labor of our ancestors. What bending and straining of stalwart backs and muscles there must have been at the building of these walls, which have been the castle of the squirrel, the weasel and the woodchuck through the centuries.

Where neither stones nor timber were plenty the half-high wall, surmounted by a rail resting or crossed stakes driven into the ground, as shown in the illustration, was early used, and is still common.

After these earlier fences came the snake or Virginia fence, made of rails arranged as shown in the illustration. This variety of fence is truly American.

The split-rail fence is also old. Logs, generally of ash, about nine feet in length, and a foot or more in diameter, split the entire length into about sixteen equal parts, formed the rails, which were chamfered at each end. Of such split sections posts were also made, having holes cut in them in the proper places to receive the ends of the rails, the fence being constructed as shown in the illustration. It is to the credit of Abraham Lincoln that in his early frontier home he was a skillful rail-splitter.

The board fence came into existence with the advent of saw-mills. The old board fence consisted of wide, rough-edged boards nailed to posts set in the ground, and was always an inartistic structure.

On leaving this subject, the countless disputes, contentions and heartaches of the past arising from line fences, where slight divergences have created feuds which have continued for several generations, and the matter of maintenance of certain portions of fences and building of spite fences are recalled. They have always been a fruitful source of disputes and friction between neighbors in the past, but under more definite laws will probably be less so in the future.

AMESBURY INSCRIPTIONS.

SALISBURY POINT CEMETERY.

This cemetery was first used apparently in 1788, the oldest gravestones there bearing that date. It was located in Salisbury until a change in the town lines in 1886 brought it within the limits of Amesbury. The following are all the inscriptions to be found there bearing dates prior to 1800.

THE name of Abbot is spelled in the early records Abbet, Abbett, Abbit, Abbitt, Abbot, Abbott, Abbut, Abbutt, Abet, Abett, Abit, Abitt, Abot, Abott, Abut and Abutt.

Among the several Abbots that early came to New England GEORGE ABBOT¹ of Andover has the most prominent and numerous descendants. He is said to have emigrated from Yorkshire, England, about 1640; and, after living at Roxbury awhile, came to Andover, where he was one of the settlers as early as 1643. He cultivated the soil, and lived on the farm latterly owned by John Abbot⁷, the house being a garrison.

He married Hannah, daughter of William and Annis Chandler of Andover (formerly of Roxbury) Dec. 12, 1646. The parties are said to have come to America in the same ship. Mr. Abbot died in Andover Dec. 24, 1681, at the age of sixty-six, being, as he says in his will, "aged and crazy in body." His wife survived him, and married Rev. Francis Dane of Andover between 1684 and 1703. She outlived Mr. Dane, and died June 11, 1711, aged eighty-two.

A TYPICAL DOGTOWN HOUSE.

THE DESERTED VILLAGE.

Sweet was the sound when oft at evening's close
Up yonder hill the village murmur rose;
There, as I passed with careless steps and slow,
The mingling notes came softened from below.

But now the sounds of population fail,
No cheerful murmurs fluctuate in the gale,
No busy steps the grass-grown footway tread,
But all the bloomy flush of life is fled.

Where then, ah where, shall poverty reside,
To 'scape the pressure of contiguous pride?
If to some common's fenceless limits strayed,
He drives his flock to pick the scanty blade,
Those fenceless fields the sons of wealth divide,
And even the bare-worn common is denied.

Oliver Goldsmith.

GLOUCESTER'S DESERTED VILLAGE.

Easterly from the head of Annisquam river, in Gloucester, was formerly a settlement known as Dogtown. Here lived the ancestors of many of the present inhabitants of Cape Ann. Dogtown commons, as the territory is now called, contains several hundred acres, and is a barren waste in its general appearance, though between the innumerable boulders grass grows for the cattle that pasture there. The old streets are distinguishable much of their distance by the parallel walls of stone, and in these old thoroughfares the grass grows as in the pastures on either side. A team could not be driven over its roads most of their course. Many of the cellars of the houses are well preserved, and door stones remain in some instances where they were first placed. Novelists and poets have written of this place, Richard Henry Dana, Thomas Starr King, Col. Thomas Wentworth Higginson and Hiram Rich being among their number. In "Oldport Days," Col. Higginson says, "I know of nothing like that gray waste of boulders."

Here a hundred families once lived. Why they chose for their habitation this place so difficult of access is not clear. It is probable that the first settlers wished to remove from the coast as the troubles of the Revolution came on, and in this place, then almost entirely surrounded by a dense forest, in the very heart of Cape Ann, they intended to secrete their valuables and families if worst came to worst, and the British burned or captured the seaports. The houses were small, generally of one story in height, with two small rooms on the floor.

Whoever the builders or first settlers were, it is clear that they were succeeded by poor and ignorant people. The seafaring occupation of the men soon removed most of them from the support of their families, and the children left home. A large number of the inhabitants came to be widows, and old and poor and ignorant, with little commerce with the outside world, many of them were soon esteemed to be witches. Their peculiar appearance, and the dreariness of the place, especially after nightfall, giving credence to the belief. The places of their natural protectors were taken by dogs, and so the region became known as Dogtown. The women obtained their living by picking berries and grazing sheep.

The cellar at the southern corner of the locality, on the brow of a steep rise of ground near Alewife brook, known as Foxhill, was covered by the residence of Lucy George, and later of her niece, Tammy Younger, "the queen of the witches." The latter was probably best known and most feared of her contemporaries. She was daughter of William Younger, was born July 28, 1753, and died Feb. 4, 1829. A writer says that no one ever refused to do anything that she requested.

A little farther north stood the shop of Joseph Allen, the first blacksmith of Gloucester, who settled there in 1674. Then came the house of John Wharf, which afterward became the property of his daughter Polly Boynton. The Tristram Coffin house and Becky Rich's abode came next. Becky told fortunes by coffee grounds. Then came the house of Nathaniel Day, and some distance beyond that of Henry Day, John Clark, Philip Priestly, William Pulcifer, Arthur Wharf and Joseph Stevens. Mr. Stevens was something of a farmer. Nearly opposite his house stood that of the poor, but aristocratic Miss Esther Carter, which was the only two-story house in the village. It was clapboarded, and wooden pegs were used instead of nails in its construction. She, with her brother Joseph are thought to have come from England. The second story of her house was occupied by "Old Ruth," a mulatto, formerly a slave, who wore men's clothing. Then came the house of Molly Stevens. The house of William Carter's wife Annie, which stood a little farther east, in the rear of a large boulder, was the last one taken down in the village. The Dorcas Foster house was near. Her father brought his family here from the Harbor village when he enlisted into the Revolutionary army, Dorcas being at that time only eight years of age. She married, first, an Oakes, second, a Stevens, and, third, Capt. Joseph Smith, the commander of a privateer in the war of 1812. Next beyond was the house of Capt. Isaac Dade, who lived when a boy in London, Eng., and was impressed into an English man-of-war. He married Fanny Brundle, a lady of Virginia, whose father's plantation adjoined that of the mother of Washington, with whom they were intimate. Soon after their marriage they came to Gloucester to recover Mr. Dade's health, which was broken down, and the Virginia lady took up her abode in Dogtown.

Toward the north was the large gambrel-roofed house of Abraham Wharf, who committed suicide in 1814.

The last inhabitant of the village was Cornelius Finson, or "Neil," a colored man, who resided in an old ruined house until 1830, when he was taken to the almshouse, where he died a week later.

Some distance to the northwest of Neil's place was the house of Peter Lurvey, the hero of Hiram Rich's poem, beginning

"Morgan Stanwood, patriot:
Little more is known;
But the door-step stone."

His father, Peter Lurvey, removed from Ipswich to Gloucester in 1707, and married Rachel Elwell three years later. John Morgan Stanwood was Peter's son-in-law, and tradition was thus led astray as to the name of the patriot, as this was the home of both. "Granter Stanward" believed that his legs were of glass and feared to use them because of their fragility.

Some distance westerly was the residence of "Jim White." Still farther west and near Washington street still stands the "old castle," a part of which is built of square logs. It is supposed to have been originally built in 1661 by Thomas Riggs, the first schoolmaster and town clerk.

Forty-one cellars have been discovered here. There may have been houses without cellars, thus increasing the size of the village, which has now been gone nearly three quarters of a century.

ANSWERS.

1. Sarah Tarbox was probably daughter of Sarah and Rebecca (Armetage) Tarbox, and born at Lynn Oct. 15, 1674.
—Ed.

1. John Batchelder of Wenham married Hannah Tarbox in 1702. She was a daughter of Ens. Samuel Tarbox, of Lynn, and his second wife, Experience Look. This couple had a son Thomas who married Esther Edwards and moved to Wenham. After the death of Ens. Samuel Tarbox the widow and family removed from Lynn to Wenham. In the Gen. Hist. Reg., vol. 42, pages 27-29, will be found the family record of Ens. Samuel Tarbox. It seemed to me, that, as John and Ebenezer Batchelder were connections, possibly Hannah and Sarah Tarbox, their respective wives, were from the same family.—E. S. T., Lowell.

OLD NICHOLS HOMESTEAD, NOW FERNCROFT INN.

BY ANDREW NICHOLS.

HENRY BARTHOLOMEW was an inhabitant of Salem as early as 1637, and soon after that date received a grant of several hundred acres located in the northern part of the town. In 1650, this territory became a part of Topsfield, and in 1728 a part of Middleton, in which latter town most of it has since been included. In 1651 he conveyed this tract of land to William Nichols, the immigrant ancestor of the name, who had also been living in Salem since 1637, in that section early known as Brooksby, and now included in the western part of Peabody.

Mr. Nichols erected a house upon the premises about one-third of a mile due north from the present Ferncroft Inn. Here he lived with his wife Mary and three children until his decease, and, as it was gone soon after, probably no other family ever occupied the old house. Mr. Nichols' death occurred in the winter of 1695-6, at the age of about ninety-six, having been born in 1599. He had three children, John, born in 1641, and two daughters, Mary, who married Thomas Cave of Topsfield, and Hannah, the wife of Thomas Wilkins.

In 1678, William Nichols was possessed of one hundred and eighty acres of land as his homestead; and Jan. 4, 1678-9, he conveyed to Isaac Burton, who had been in his family for twenty-five years, and had been like a son to him, thirty acres from the northwestern end of it.* On this lot Mr. Burton erected a dwelling-house, in which he lived, the cellar of which being still seen about forty rods westward from Ferncroft. Two days later, Mr. Nichols conveyed the remainder of his homestead, one hundred and fifty acres, to his son, John, and his wife Lydia, it being "my farme that I now live upon," in Topsfield,* but retained his residence in the house then standing upon the premises, as before stated.

Soon after the date of his deed (1679), John Nichols built upon this tract of land the house shown in the frontispiece, which has recently been transformed into the Ferncroft Inn, and resided therein. The old house stood in the valley, shut in by hills. John chose for the site of his house a high elevation toward Salem, which presented attractive scenery and a wider prospect, though not so well shielded from the cold winds of winter. John's father helped him greatly in the way of financial assistance during his lifetime, as papers on file in the settlement of the estate of William Nichols show, and it was probably in the way of building and finishing this house, as one so large and so thoroughly made as this must have cost a great deal. The great oak timbers attest its age and durability; and the style of the chimney without and its form and size within is the true type of the better earlier houses of New England.

About the time of the witchcraft delusion, John Nichols conveyed to his son-in-law Humphrey Case a lot of land, on which Mr. Case erected a house in which he lived. The site of this house was about two-thirds of the distance from Ferncroft Inn to the ice houses on the direct road to the old Newburyport and Boston turnpike. Here the Case family resided many years, and the cellar alone remains to mark the spot.

Mr. Nichols died here in the autumn of 1700, at the age of fifty-nine. His wife was named Lydia, and their children were, William; Anna, who married Francis Elliot; John, born Jan. 14, 1667; Thomas, who settled in Sutton; Isaac; Lydia, wife of Aquilla Wilkins; Rachel, who married Humphrey Case; Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Brewer; Ebenezer; and Margaret, ten in all.

Four years previous to his decease, Mr. Nichols gave a deed of the homestead to his son John and his wife Constant to hold during their joint lives, and the life of the survivor of them, and the remainder "to his heirs or heirs of his body lawfully begotten."* The son John and his family lived here until his death, which probably occurred in the spring of 1757, as administration on his estate was granted to his widow, Martha, June 27th of that year. He had three children, Edward, John and Samuel.

The youngest son, Samuel, came into sole possession of the farm on the death of his father, by inheritance and purchase.† He was born here Feb. 25, 1714-5; and married, first, Abigail Elliot Nov. 17, 1742. She died May 27, 1759; and he married, second, Anna White. His son Samuel, born here in 1743, enlisted into the navy, sailed to the West Indies, and was never heard from. Another son, Andrew, was the father of Dr. Andrew Nichols, the first president of the Essex County Natural History Society.

In 1728 the town of Middleton was incorporated. The town was formed from parts of Andover, Boxford, Salem and Topsfield; and the portion taken from Topsfield included the Nichols homestead, which has ever since been in Middleton.

The Burton house, allusion to which has already been made, together with the lot of land on which it stood, came into the possession of Samuel Nichols, by purchase, in 1757,* and was owned by him as long as he kept the farm.

For fifteen hundred and eighty and one-half pounds, Mr. Nichols conveyed the farm, including the two dwelling-houses and two barns, to Capt. Israel Foster, a merchant of Beverly, May 17, 1777.†

After the Revolution, Captain Foster removed to Marblehead, where he was also a merchant. While he possessed the farm he removed the old Burton house and barn, which had probably been built as early as the Nichols house.

He probably never lived here, but let the farm, one of the lessees being Isaac Giddings.

With the consent of his wife Jane, Captain Foster conveyed the farm to Daniel Porter, of Topsfield, a tanner, Dec. 30, 1805, for $3,900.‡ Mr. Porter lived on a farm in Topsfield, which was separated from this farm by the brook only, and probably never lived here. At the time of Mr. Porter's decease, his son Allen was living here and probably had been for some years.

Daniel Porter died Jan. 28, 1831; and his executors, Allen and Ira Porter, two of his sons, conveyed this farm, by order of court, to George Towne, of Danvers, April 26, 1831.§ And on the same day Mr. Towne re-conveyed the farm to Allen Porter,|| who continued to dwell in the ancient house.

Mr. Porter lived here until Nov. 30, 1838, when he sold the estate to Jeremiah Augustus Estey of Middleton.¶ The farm then contained one hundred and forty-three acres.

Mr. Estey lived upon the premises until he conveyed the same to Jonathan Perry, of Danvers, April 15, 1841.* Mr. Perry died Nov. 16, 1845, and his heirs released their interest in the estate, Jan. 16, 1847, to his son Edwin A. Perry,† who, April 1, following, sold it to Daniel Peabody, of Danvers.‡

Mr. Peabody lived in the western part of the house; and June 26, 1849, conveyed the eastern end of the house and western part of the barn and a portion of the homestead lands to Andrew Verry, of Middleton.§ He sold out to Aaron Jenkins, of Middleton, April 1, 1862;|| and Mr. Jenkins, who had removed to Salem, sold to the Harris family of that city, the present owners, Feb. 6, 1880.

Mr. Peabody became involved in a law suit of some six years continuance, in which General Butler was counsel, and removed to Stoneham about 1858, his part of the house being subsequently occupied for some years by Jonathan Perry, son of the above named Jonathan.

Mr. Peabody's part of the premises was sold by the sheriff to James M. Perry, of Danvers, Aug. 2, 1870;¶ and he conveyed it back to Mr. Peabody May 10, 1872.

May 10, 1882, Mr. Peabody conveyed his part of the homestead to Sidney C. Bancroft, Esq., of Peabody, who, twelve days later, passed the title to the present owners.

The frontispiece shows the old house as it appeared twenty years ago, before any changes had occurred in its exterior.

Some improvements were made by the present owners upon their purchase of the farm, but no additions of any considerable extent were made until 1892, when it was thought well to open the old manse to the public. A broad piazza, running the whole length of the house, was added to the front; and at the rear was made the principal place of entrance. Some artistic landscape gardening greatly improved the grounds.

After two successful seasons in serving lunches and dinners to the public, further additions were made, including a spacious dining-room upon the front of the house, the original oak front door, with its hand-wrought nails, being retained.

The owners have been to a great deal of pains and expense to furnish Ferncroft with ancient furniture, utensils, ornaments, and China, English and Holland wares of various kinds. Among the articles are some ancient books and prints, a buffet, a silver-lined drinking-horn, antique plates and pewter platters, a Dutch delst pitcher of the sixteenth century, candlesticks, tall clocks, ancient armor, canopied bedsteads, an old claw-foot sideboard, made of various kinds of wood, with an oval marine view on marble set in the centre, the drawers being velvet lined, and two large arm-chairs of solid oak, reputed to have been the property of Robert Burns, the poet of Ayr.

Among the most interesting things that can be seen here is the wall-paper. The office walls are covered with Shakespearian paper, the hall with the old English landscape paper, and the dining-room with wall-paper representing old hunting scenes and sports of merry England.

At the bend of the road near the house is a rustic post from which swings the sign used at the beginning of this century at the old tavern in Topsfield when William Meady was its proprietor. On one side is a portrait of George Washington in his military uniform; while on the other is that of John Quincy Adams. After many years of repose among attic cobwebs, the sign has returned to its former usefulness.

The house has now been open to the public four seasons, and thousands have examined its nooks and crannies and antiques, and enjoyed the cuisine and delightful grounds, and a drink from the deep old well with its well-sweep and oaken bucket.

Old houses have ever a charm; and romance clings to them in the minds of all people that are not decidedly unimaginative and unimpressionable. Births, weddings, deaths of their occupants have followed each other in their natural order, generation after generation.

Erected in the time of the Indian depredations amidst the woods, far away from neighbors and miles from any considerable settlement, the early occupants of this old mansion must have ever dreaded the unseen approach of the savages, with their torch and tomahawk and scalping knife.
Later in the midst of the social life of the neighborhood where the terrible witchcraft delusion broke out, they saw their friends, neighbors and relatives accused, convicted and hanged, and knew not how soon the condemning finger might be pointed at them. Passing through the period of the Indian and French wars, the Revolution, and all the commotions of this century, its occupants saw the colony become a province, and the province a great state. Yet stands the old house ready to enter upon the twentieth century.

The following lines were written of this old place :—

The breeze blows keen, but the sun glints bright ;
O'er the old gray house on the wooded hill
Stand the pines, stern sentinels clad in green,
And the rippling river stands mute and still.

I pass within by the friendly blaze
Of the huge "back log" and the pine-tree's cone,
By the chimney huge in the quaint old hall,
I sit in the gloaming and muse alone.

What stalwart yeoman or cultured youth
Brought hither his smiling and bonnie bride?
What hopes have perished, what been fulfilled?
What aspirations have lived and died?

What children frolicked by this old hearth?
What baby slept on its mother's knee?
What grandsire pondered o'er Holy Writ?
Had they hours of gloom, had they days of glee?

What lovers strolled through yon woodland paths
When the wild red roses were all aglow?
What youngsters coasted adown these hills
When the whole wide land was a field of snow?

Did they quaff at Thanksgiving, with joke and jest,
The home-brewed beer and the nut-brown ale,
At the table heaped by the good wife's skill?—
"For seedtime and harvest shall never fail."

Had they Christmas greetings and goodly cheer?
Were the stockings hung by this chimney, old?
Did the mistletoe hang from these rafters here,
While the sweet old story of love was told?

Have hearts here broken and loves grown cold?
Have friendships turned into mortal hate?
Have lives grown passionless, stern and grim,
Crushed by the iron hand of Fate?

Were there days of sorrow and nights of joy,
Sad hours of watching mid sobs and tears?
Old house, old house, hast thou seen them all,
And the happy dawning of glad New Years?

Or did smiling Plenty and Peace serene
Gild the glad morning and bless the night ;
Did Hope and Happiness reign supreme,
And hearts run thrilling with love and light?

The sun flames red in the glowing west—
My soul seems bound by some mystic spell.
I pause—I linger—I breathe goodbye.
Old house, thou guardest thy secrets well!

SECOND MARRIAGES.

When in the flush of life and hope,
 The springtime of their lives,
 Our fathers loved and wooed and won
 Their neighbors' girls for wives;
 Though oft with blindness Cupid gave
 A blessing or a curse,
 They married them, and brought them home
 For better or for worse.

But when time passed, alone again,
 Another mate was sought,
 They gave less heed to sentiment,
 And more to prudent thought;
 They made the matter business,
 And oft in writing shown,
 The wife retained what she possessed,
 The husband kept his own.

SMOCK MARRIAGES.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

These are marriages where the bride appeared dressed in a white sheet or chemise, and sometimes without any covering whatever. Both in Old and New England in the last century brides could thus be seen taking connubial vows upon them.

The reason of this was the belief that if a man married a woman who was in debt he would be held liable for her indebtedness to her creditors if he received her at the hands of the minister or magistrate with any of her property. And, also, that if a woman married a man who was owing debts his creditors could not take her property to satisfy them if he received nothing from her.

In England, there is a least one case that has come to the knowledge of the writer where the bride was clothed puris naturalibus while the ceremony was being performed in the great church at Birmingham. The minister at first refused to perform the ceremony, but finding nothing in the rubric that would excuse him from the exercise of his professional functions he married the pair. The public were much incensed at the clergyman, and it made considerable newspaper comment at the time. The date was 1797.

To carry out the law as the people of that century understood it, the ceremony should always have been performed as it was in the Birmingham church instance. But the modesty of the people generally forbade such an exhibition, and various expedients were resorted to to accomplish the desired effect and yet avoid the undesirable features. Sometimes the bride stood in a closet and put her hand through a hole cut in the door. Sometimes she stood behind a cloth screen, and put her hand out at one side of it. Again, she wound about her person a white sheet furnished for the occasion by the groom; and sometimes she stood in her chemise, or smock, or shift, as the same garment is variously called. Eventually, in Essex county, at least, all immodesty of the performance of such a wedding was overcome by the groom furnishing to the bride all the clothes she wore, retaining title to the same in himself. This he did in the presence of witnesses, that he might prove the fact in case he was subjected to a suit for any debts she might have previously contracted. A marriage of this kind occurred at Bradford in 1733; and the following is a copy of the record of the same:—

“Bradford, Dec. ye 24, 1733.

“This may certifie whomsoever it may concerne that James Bailey of Bradford who was married to the widow Mary Bacon Nov. 22 last past by me ye subscriber then Declared that he took the said person without anything of Estate and that Lydia the wife of Eliazer Burbank & Mary the wife of Thos. Stickney & Margaret the wife of Caleb Burbank all of Bradford were witnesses that the clothes she then had on were of his providing & bestowing upon her.

It is noticed by the writer that in all cases of “smock marriages,” as they are called, that have come to his knowledge, the brides have been widows. Widows were always liable to be owing debts for the support of their families. Maiden ladies were then usually married young before they had contracted debts to any considerable amount, and again the consideration of the financial condition of the couple was then as now of secondary importance to young people. With the lapse of years the sentimental glow of youth somewhat abates, and the matter-of-factness of life has more control of human judgment.

Mr. Abbe had other children than those given, viz: Joseph, born in Wenham in 1673, and mentioned in the second paragraph of Abbe Notes, page 33; Obadiah, who married Elizabeth Wilkinson at Malden Dec. 26, 1701, and settled at Windham, later removing to Ashford, Conn.; Abigail,* who married Daniel Sabin of Windham March 18, 1701; Mary, born Sept. 16, 1684, and married James Pease of Enfield, Conn.; Mercy, born March 5, 1689, and married Nathaniel Flint of Windham; John, born April 20, 1691, married twice, had children, and lived in Windham; Hannah, born Aug. 13, 1693, and married Thomas Welch of Windham; and Sarah, born in Windham March 11, 1699, and married John Welch. DROWNING ACCIDENT.

Salem, Aug. 23. "Laft Friday a very uncommon Accident happened off Manchester, and the following Account is related by a person who saw it.---- Nicholas Whipple, Abraham Wyatt, and Daniel Poland, all of Beverly, were fishing in a Canoe, near Little Mifery Island, which lays within 2 or 3 Leagues of this Harbour, and had out a Kellogg, or small Anchor; while they were employed at their Bufiness, to their inexpressible Surprise, the Canoe suddenly shot forward, with very great Rapidity, without any apparent Cause, and, before they could cut the Painter, run the Distance of about 70 or 80 Feet, when she was pulled so low as to fill and overfet, and then stopped. One of the Men swam ashore, another saved his Life by getting upon the Bottom of the Canoe, and remaining there till relieved by some People in a Fisherman's Canoe, then in Sight, getting in Ballast; and the third, Daniel Poland, was unfortunately drowned, who, we hear, has left a Wife and 7 or 8 Children. It is supposed that some large Fish run foul of the Painter, dragged the Canoe the above mentioned Distance, and was then disengaged."—Essex Gazette, Aug. 23, 1768.

No. 5.

REV. JACOB BAILEY.

MR. BAILEY was a son of Deacon David and Mary (Hodgkins) Bailey, and was born in Rowley, Mass., in the ancient house pictured on the next page, in 1731. His father had a large family; and though always industrious and saving he obtained for them but a scanty maintenance.

The means for securing an education, beyond the slightest knowledge of writing, reading and arithmetic, were not within the grasp of poor boys in Rowley at that time. Extreme bashfulness added to young Bailey's poverty the hopelessness of ever being anything more than a drudge within a world whose confines were little more than the extent of his vision. From his early childhood he had an insatiable desire for knowledge and travel; a thirst which he could never hope to satisfy. He had no books. They were scarce and high; and his labor must be bestowed upon that which would assist in obtaining bread and clothing for the family from day to day.

The poor are sometimes ambitious, and by some means sooner or later such will lift themselves into prominence and positions of responsibility.

Without books, this young man did the best thing to do; he made them. Arduous toil occupied the day, but during the hours of darkness his time was his own. When the family were asleep he frequently spent hours in writing, upon such paper as he could find, thoughts that came to him, occurrences of the day, descriptions of the neighborhood, the people, their customs, etc., thus acquiring skill and knowledge and accomplishing that which books alone could not effect.

One day some of his scribbling came to the knowledge of Rev. Jedediah Jewett, the pastor of the parish in which Mr. Bailey was born, and a learned Christian gentleman. He was much impressed with the originality and slumbering talents of the young man, and came to his father's house to see him. When Jacob was called, on learning who the visitor was, he was so diffident that he went into the woods and remained there until Mr. Jewett had departed.

Arrangements were, however, made with Jacob's father by which the boy was to study a year with Mr. Jewett gratuitously. His thirst for learning was so intense, that after a great struggle he overcame his diffidence, and placed himself under the agreed tutelage; thus taking his first step out of obscurity.

Mr. Bailey entered Harvard college in 1751, at the age of twenty. Poverty placed him, in those days of social distinctions, at the foot of his class, in which were John Wentworth, afterward baronet and governor of New Hampshire and Nova Scotia; John Adams, afterward second president of the United States; William Browne, who became the royal governor of Bermuda, and a justice of the supreme court of Massachusetts; David Sewall, who also became a justice of the supreme court of Massachusetts; Tristram Dalton, in after years a member of the United States senate; Samuel Locke, afterward president of the University; and Rev. William W. Wheeler, a missionary of the Church of England.

Mr. Bailey relied principally upon Mr. Jewett for means to pursue his course of study in college. Mr. Jewett persuaded Messrs. Cushing and Newman, of Boston, to give eighty-five pounds each, and also solicited money from other persons to aid the needy student. Among them was Sir William Pepperell. Jan. 28, 1754, when he was at home in Rowley, he was so discouraged that he almost resolved to go to sea; but by the friendly overtures of Rev. James Chandler, pastor of the church in the West parish (now the town of Georgetown), who gave him two dollars in money and a pair of gloves, and loaned him his Hebrew Bible, he returned to college.

He developed during his college course fidelity, courage and a rather unyielding

June 4, 1758, Mr. Bailey attended an association of Congregational ministers at the house of Rev. Mr. Odlin in Exeter, N. H., to deliver his approbation discourse, which he says he read after having overcome his extreme diffidence. He was duly accepted, and approbated to preach the gospel, and thus became a regular clergyman.

The time that he could have devoted to the study of theology and the Bible during the three years that he taught school, after his graduation from college, must have been limited. He preached occasionally at various places along the coast during the twelve months succeed-will, and as a result of his condition in life, probably, became possessed of strong prejudices and a slight eccentricity. He graduated in 1755.

While in college he taught school in his native town in 1753, and after his graduation, in 1755, in Kingston, N. H. He endeavored to establish a private school there in the following spring, but failed; and succeeded no better in the same season in a similar enterprise in his native town. In the summer of 1756 he taught in Hampton, N. H., and continued there until April, 1758, when he went to Gloucester, Mass., where he was a teacher until December, 1759.

ing his approbation, and pursued his school work at Gloucester.

For some reason, not now known, Mr. Bailey concluded to enter the service of the Episcopal church. Dec. 13, 1759, he left Gloucester and walked to Boston, spending the night, while on the trip, at Norwood's tavern, in Lynn. Jan. 10, 1760, with his college diploma, which he had just obtained from the president, and letters of recommendation from various clergymen in Boston, addressed to the archbishop of Canterbury, the bishop of London, and the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts, he set sail from Boston for London in the Hind.

He arrived at Portsmouth, England, Feb. 16, after a very disagreeable voyage, having had the meanest accommodations and fare and very profane and uncouth associates. He went by stage from Portsmouth to London.

After having passed the customary examination, he was ordained, March 16, in St. James' church; and was introduced to the bishop of London, Thomas Sherlock, at his palace at Fulham. This was only a few months before the death of the bishop, and while he was terribly disfigured by his disease.

He received nineteen pounds, seven shillings and sixpence, the royal bounty to all American clergymen after ordination, the king signing the order himself. The Prince of Wales also presented him with a copy of Leland's View of the Deistical Writers and some other works.

He was then informed that the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, had appointed him their missionary at Pownalborough, on the Kennebec river, with a salary of fifty pounds.

Before leaving London, Mr. Bailey called upon and dined with Benjamin Franklin.

He returned to America in a frigate, sailing in March, and sighted the mountains of Agamenticus May 28, arriving in Boston June 4.

Mr. Bailey made no delay in commencing his missionary labors at Pownalborough. He arrived there July 1, and took up his abode with the family of Capt. Samuel Goodwin, a surveyor. The town contained one hundred and fifteen families. His parish, however, comprehended the county, which consisted of the settlements scattered along the Kennebec river for fifty miles. He soon found that the service was no sinecure. Travelling was inconvenient and dangerous through the almost trackless wilderness, and the river afforded very little advantage over land travel. He found the people poor and ignorant, having neither schools nor preaching, and he became very useful to them by his diligence, prudence and exemplary life. He was the only clergyman in the entire region at that time, and his work lay among seven thousand people, besides the Norridgewock Indians, who were Catholics. He also preached at Georgetown as often as he could.

In August, 1761, Mr. Bailey married Sally, daughter of Dr. John and Martha (Wingate) Weeks of Hampton, N. H., who was much younger than himself, and had been one of his pupils.

In the same year (1761), Pownalborough became a county seat, and a court house was built. In it the services of the church were held for several years.

The next spring, Mr. Bailey removed across the river to Richmond, where he could have land to better advantage.

In 1768, he was invited to become the rector of the church in Amesbury, Mass., but he decided to remain with his poor people, with whom he had been for nearly eight years.

A church was built at Pownalborough, and in 1771 a parsonage-house was completed and occupied by Mr. Bailey and his family. It stood about fifty rods from the church.

Soon after the courts began to be held at Pownalborough, some persons of wealth and influence settled there. From them Mr. Bailey hoped to obtain assistance in his work, but instead they were opposed to him.

He suffered also from his loyalty to the king as the dawn of the Revolution came on, and on several occasions was compelled to flee before mobs. The battle of Lexington increased the feeling against the Episcopal ministers especially, and down into the wilds of Maine went many people who were loyal to their sovereign. Among these was Mr. Bailey's brother-in-law Rev. J. Wingate Weeks, rector of St. Michael's church in Marblehead, who with his wife and eight young children took refuge in Mr. Bailey's house. Here, they were discovered, and insulted and threatened.

Because of Mr. Bailey's position on the political question, nearly one-half of the members of his church withdrew. He was stigmatized as an enemy to his country, and some of his domestic animals were killed in the pasture. In 1777, he was forbidden to pray for the king, but he continued to do so, and would not read in his pulpit the Declaration of Independence. A warrant was issued for the arrest of himself and others, who were loyal to the crown, for the purpose of transporting them out of the country. He lay concealed in his house for five weeks, an attempt upon his life having been made, and escaped secretly, on foot and in a canoe, to Brunswick. His wife was left with a young infant and two little girls and without money or provisions, except a few garden roots. On horseback, he continued to flee, through Falmouth, toward Portsmouth. Before he arrived there he heard of Burgoyne's surrender, and hurried forward to Boston. There, he remained for about two months, when he thought that he might return home in safety, and came back at Christmas, having been gone since Oct. 15.

Though a considerable number of his poor people adhered to him through all his trouble, he had received no salary since June, 1775, three years' time, during which he had continued to perform his duties whenever it was possible.

He resolved to remove his family into the region that still remained loyal, and not permit them to suffer longer as they had for several years preceding. In the autumn of 1778, he petitioned for leave to remove into Nova Scotia.

While waiting for the dilatory council to act upon his petition, he was seized by a mob and stripped naked in search of papers, alleging that he intended to escape surreptitiously to Quebec.

About the first of November, the general court granted his petition, and he was allowed to depart with his family and goods to Halifax. But the inclemency of the season forbade their journey until spring. They sailed in a small schooner, June 9, 1779, leaving behind his library and their many friends, who would still be ill-treated because of their loyalty to the mother country. They had a stormy passage most of the way, but at length a gentle wind wafted them toward Acadian shores. But after they had had a view of the province, another storm compelled their stay at sea for several days. They landed at Halifax June 21.

After having been in the province awhile, Mr. Bailey was invited to become pastor of the church at Cornwallis during the subsequent winter. Cornwallis was a part of that beautiful region known as "the garden of Nova Scotia." This was a part of the Acadia of the French settlers, and adjoining if not a part of the same territory as Grand Pré, the principal town of the neutral French in the former years, and the scene of Longfellow's Evangeline. Cornwallis is now called Upper Canard. On Sept. 6, 1779, Mr. Bailey wrote that he dined upon the very spot where René LeBlanc, the public notary of the Acadians, had lived. After the devastation of the region by the English, about 1761, a colony of two hundred persons from Connecticut settled Cornwallis. At the time of Mr. Bailey's arrival about two hundred families were living there. Invitations had also been extended to Mr. Bailey to settle at St. John and Cumberland, but as he had given some encouragement to the people of Cornwallis he would not disappoint them, although by settling with them he sacrificed much more advantageous prospects.

He began his service at Cornwallis in October, 1779. The succeeding winter was one of anxiety and gloom; the people were divided in religious matters, and his supporters were so few and poor that they could do but little for their shepherd. His salary was almost nothing.

In the next summer, he was appointed deputy chaplain to the eighty-fourth regiment, a part of which then kept a garrison at Annapolis.

Mr. Bailey remained at Cornwallis until July 26, 1782, when he removed to Annapolis, having been appointed missionary for that place on the twenty-ninth of the preceding January by the Society in England. He made his change of residence with a cart and two yoke of oxen, carrying his goods, and a vehicle covered with canvas and drawn by two horses, conveying Mrs. Bailey and the children. Friends accompanied them for fourteen miles. They then entered the wilderness, passed along the unmade path, which was specially dangerous in the darkness of the thick clouds, great showers making ponds of water in the hollows, swelling the streams and drenching them. The distance was seventy-two miles, and five days were tediously spent in traveling it. Of the termination of this journey, Aug. 1, Mr. Bailey wrote: "Having passed through a gloomy wood, we suddenly opened upon an extensive plain overspread with the richest verdure, ornamented with little groves, and beautified with bunches of wild roses, which scattered their delicious fragrance through the air. After crossing this plain the remainder of our progress for the space of a mile was an easy descent towards the northwest, both sides of the road being adorned with little fields, gardens and orchards. Upon an obtuse point of land formed by the bending of the river, the town appeared, rising amidst a forest of fruit trees, while the lofty mountains of Granville terminated the direct view."

Annapolis, or Port Royal, as it was at first called, was settled by adventurers from France in 1604, who established there an important fortress and the Romish religious worship. In 1713, by treaty Nova Scotia passed into the possession of the English, who in honor of the reigning sovereign, Queen Ann, changed the name from Port Royal to Annapolis. Here the governor of Nova Scotia resided; and, until 1750, when Halifax became the seat of the provincial government, it was the most noted place in the eastern country, except Louisburg.

No English mission had been established there, though religious services had been held there a few times by Rev. Thomas Wood, formerly of New Jersey and Rev. J. Wingate Weeks, formerly of Marblehead, Mass.

Mr. Bailey was kindly received by the inhabitants. At that time there were only about one hundred and twenty persons in the town; but, in October, nine transports, convoyed by two men-of-war, arrived from New York with five hundred refugees of both sexes and of all ages. Every habitation became crowded, and many were unable to procure lodgings. Most of the new-comers had left all their property, and were suffering for common necessaries. They were people of culture and fashion and deeply felt their deprivations. The influx of loyalists from New England was so great that thousands landed at Annapolis in 1783. Several hundred slept in the church, and more were unprovided for. The season was rigorous and stormy. Nov. 6, 1783, Mr. Bailey wrote to the home society that nearly "four hundred of these miserable exiles perished in a violent storm, and I am persuaded that disease, disappointment, poverty, and chagrin will finish the course of many more before the return of another spring."

In 1787, in reply to suggestions relative to dressing better and to his toilet, Mr. Bailey wrote as follows to Doctor Peters in London:—

"If you reflect that we are liable to be called, upon a sudden emergency, in all weathers, to distant excursions, where our progress must be continued, partly on foot, partly on horseback, by land and by water, through deep morasses, muddy roads, and unbroken forests, you cannot wonder that we sometimes exhibit a tragic-comic appearance. Several times in the year past I have been exposed in this manner, amidst violent storms of rain, mire to the horse's belly, wet to my skin, and my clothes rent in climbing over windfalls; and in this pickle to perform the service I went upon and then to return in the same shattered condition. You are sensible that should a clergyman adjourn a sermon, a wedding, or a funeral, or a christening, or the visiting of a sick or dying person till fine weather, as other gentlemen may do, who only travel for pleasure, it would still be more criminal. I will give you an extract from my journal to the present purpose.

“ ‘November 15th. After a severe frosty night we set forward, being four in company, for a wedding, to Clement’s, about fourteen miles below Annapolis.

“ ‘In the second mile we crossed Allan’s river, a rapid, rocky stream, where we were finely bespattered. Our progress for several miles lay through horrid, broken roads, so encumbered with rocks, holes and gullies, roots of trees, and wind-falls, and sloughs, that the passage was extremely difficult and dangerous. We were frequently obliged to dismount and lead our horses, wallowing knee-deep through the mire. The last six miles conducted us over hanging precipices, woody promontories, and three stony beaches, full of honey pots. We crossed Moose river at a critical moment, as the tide was running in with great rapidity. A little before sunset we arrived at Mr. Jones’, a log house with two small apartments, where I united in matrimony, Sheepy Spur and Alicia Van Voorhies, the bride very pretty.

“ ‘The house being crowded with people, Capt. Ditmarsh, the bride’s grandfather, invited us to sleep at his house. A little before dark we set forward, and having walked about a mile, we came to a river, where, after wading into the water over our knees, we were under the necessity of returning in a dismal, dark and cloudy evening, along the ragged banks or a rocky beach, every moment in danger of breaking our legs, and of having our eyes scratched out against the branches of trees which had fallen over the bank. We at length recovered the house, where music and dancing continued till after sun-rising. About nine we began to return towards Annapolis, but we had no sooner crossed Moose river than a cold, disagreeable storm of wind and rain commenced, which quickly rendered these new roads intolerable. Mrs. Spur was thrown from her horse, but her husband, catching her in his arms, prevented her from receiving any harm.

“ ‘She was however, so wet and fatigued that we were obliged to leave her behind. By twelve we were completely soaked to our skins, and, by the plunging of our horses, were covered with mud from the soles of our shoes to the crown of our hats. Before dark I reached my habitation in woful plight.

“ ‘Memorandum. Received half a dollar fee, as a reward for my journey, expense, trouble, wear and tear, and in consequence of this soaking, I was afflicted with the rheumatism through the winter, though I never omitted duty.’

“ ‘As to Annapolis town, upon my arrival it contained eighteen families, at present forty-five, only four or five of which, either by fortune or education, have any pretensions to politeness, and these are all very friendly. One has exerted himself to procure subscriptions, and another, acknowledged to be the politest man in the county, has subscribed to give five pounds yearly. The other families are tavern keepers, disbanded sergeants, Scotch pedlars, mechanics, farmers and negroes.

“ ‘Some are transformed into shopkeepers, and others remain very indigent. There is not a building equal to the homes of middling farmers in New England. It is from a regard to truth, and not from any disrespect that I transmit this account, for I am treated civilly by all. I have not, to my knowledge, an enemy among them, and they have readily subscribed to give me twenty pounds per annum, which is as much as they are able. It is payable in May, and most of them have already discharged the first year, and the fear of my being removed was their principal inducement to subscribe.

“ ‘But the inhabitants of Annapolis are not the fifth part of my parishioners.

They are chiefly husbandmen and laborers with miserable habitations. Many families are confined to a single apartment, built with sods, where men, women, children, pigs, fowls, fleas, bugs, mosquitoes and other domestic insects, mingle in society. No less than forty of these huts exist within a mile and a half of Annapolis town. In some of these wretched hovels, the politest clergyman in Europe, were he a missionary, would be constrained to enter, to eat, and perhaps to sleep, or else to neglect his duty."*

Jan. 20, 1794, Mr. Bailey was appointed, by Gov. John Wentworth, deputy chaplain of the garrison at Annapolis. He had performed the duties of this office for several years, but another had received the emoluments.

The county was his parish, which was called St. Luke's. He died of dropsy, July 26, 1808, at the age of seventy-six, having retained his faculties, both of body and mind, to the last. He was below medium stature, and had a delicate constitution. The frontispiece of this number is an exact reproduction of the only portrait of him.

His love of learning assisted him in removing many obstacles in order that he might acquire knowledge and cultivate his mental powers. He had fair natural talents, and was possessed of a large amount of varied information.

He was always busy, and well employed in a great variety of matters and lines of investigation.

He was a voluminous writer of both prose and poetry. He prepared a manuscript history of New England; a description of New Brunswick, with an account of the sufferings of the American loyalists; some dramatic sketches of a political cast; and two or three manuscript school books.

Mr. Bailey was always ardently interested in politics, which was without doubt the result of the times and his peculiar situation. His visit to England revealed to him the grandeur of the military and naval power of the nation; and the attention and treatment which he received from the dignitaries had less of the distant formality and more of the free and interested republican intercourse than he had anticipated. Moreover the beneficent Church entrusted to him their bounty for the needy people in Maine and Nova Scotia, reposing full confidence in his judgment and integrity. When enemies rose to speak ill of its sway, all these things tended to draw him more and more strongly to the support of the government under which he was born and had always lived. He also felt the madness and futility of an attempt to make the colonies independent. Moreover the character of the leaders of the revolting colonists in his section rather inspired in him an aversion to rebellion on the principles of right and justice. Excessive immorality and want of religious obligation were fearlessly and openly proclaimed. If argument failed to convert a tory, mob violence was resorted to, even though the object of it was a respected clergyman, and blood was readily shed. This was not, to him, the fruit of an enlightened and honest love of liberty, or the course of its devotees.

His temporal condition remained unimproved to the last. He never had an income sufficient for the maintenance of himself and family; yet his hospitality was ever generous. Despite certain strong elements of his character he always retained the personal regard of his acquaintances, and the love of the people of his charge.

His wife and six children survived him. Mrs. Bailey died March 22, 1818, aged seventy. Of the children, Charles Percy was so handsome that, when the Duke of Kent (father of Queen Victoria) was commander of the Nova Scotia forces, he saw the lad and was so pleased with his appearance and address, that he took him under his own care and provided for him.

*From "The Frontier Missionary: A Memoir of the Life of the Rev. Jacob Bailey, A. M.," prepared by Rev. William S. Bartlet, and published in 1853.

He became an officer in the army and was killed in the battle of Chippewa, in Upper Canada. Another son, William Gilbert, was a lawyer.

THE STATE LOTTERY.

There,—speak,—speak out,—abandon fear;
 Let both the dead and living hear,—
 The dead, that they may blush for shame
 Amidst their monumental fame,—
 The living, that, forewarned of fate,
 Conscience may force them, ere too late,
 Those wheels of infamy to shun
 Which thousands touch, and are undone.

There, built by legislative hands,
 On Christian ground, an altar stands.
 “Stands? gentle poet, tell me where?”
 Go to Guildhall. “It stands not there!”
 True,—’tis my brain that raves and reels
 Whene’er it turns on lottery wheels;
 Such things in youth can I recall
 Nor think of thee,—of thee, Guildhall?
 Where erst I played with glittering schemes,
 And lay entranced in golden dreams.

OLD-TIME LOTTERIES.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

The state of public opinion at the present time in reference to all means of obtaining money by chance makes the history of our old-time lotteries interesting.

In the first years of the settlement of this region, the chimerical schemes of lotteries were not known here. But towards the close of the seventeenth century they began to develop; and early in the eighteenth century the attention of the public was forcibly drawn to them by the demoralizing influences of that system of money getting,—or money losing. The attention of the provincial general court was drawn to the matter, and Nov. 4, 1719, an act was passed forbidding the existence of lotteries under a penalty of two hundred pounds for each offence, a fine of ten pounds being put upon ticket-sellers, etc. Finding that these heavy penalties did not have the effect desired, April 26, 1733, the fine was greatly increased. The promoters of the lottery were doomed to pay a fine of five hundred pounds, and those persons who assisted in printing or writing tickets, notices, and so forth, one hundred pounds, and for exposing for sale or selling tickets two hundred pounds for each ticket so exposed or sold.

The preamble to the law of 1719, states that “there have lately been sett up within this province certain mischievous and unlawful games, called lotteries, whereby the children and servants of several gentlemen, merchants and traders, and other unwary people have been drawn into a vain and foolish expence of money, which tends to the utter ruine and impoverishment of many families, and is to the reproach of this government, and against the common good, trade, welfare and peace of the province,” and declares all lotteries to be “common and publick nuisances.”

Since the passage of the severe act of 1733, already referred to, it is probable that no private lottery of any considerable extent has been carried on in Massachusetts.

In spite of the severe language of the general court in 1719, and its confirmation in 1733, there came over the legislature in effect at least, an idea that what was obnoxious and utterly wrong for individuals to do was all right if done by the body politic. It was one of a series of instances of perversion of human judgment in which it is deemed that the end justifies the means. The ease of procuring large sums of money by means of lotteries came to be more thoroughly understood, and when the provincial treasury was very much depleted, Feb. 4, 1744-5, an act was passed establishing the “Massachusetts Government Lottery,” to raise seventy-five hundred pounds for the service of the province. Twenty-five thousand tickets were issued, and sold for thirty shillings each. There were five thousand four hundred and twenty-two prizes, divided as follows, viz: two of twelve hundred and fifty pounds each; four of six hundred and twenty-five; six of three hundred and seventy-five; eight of two hundred and fifty; sixteen of one hundred and twenty-five; thirty-six of sixty-two pounds, ten shillings; one hundred and fifty of thirty pounds; and fifty-two hundred of three pounds, fifteen shillings each. The total amount of the prizes, thirty-seven thousand, five hundred pounds, equalled the amount of the proceeds from the sale of the tickets. The profit was obtained by every winner paying over to the province twenty per cent of his prize.

This, the first public lottery here, was soon succeeded by others. The second of these was one for raising twelve hundred dollars to defray the expense of building and maintaining a bridge over Parker river in Newbury. The act was passed Jan. 29, 1750-1, at the request of the town of Newbury. In this lottery, the amount deducted from each prize was ten per cent. of the same. With the funds thus raised the bridge was built in 1758. More money was needed, however, to meet unforeseen charges, and April 28, 1760, the general court passed another act establishing a lottery to raise six hundred dollars for that purpose.

April 21, 1761, The Lords of Trade in London wrote to Governor Bernard, at Boston, stating that several laws had been passed providing for the construction of ferries, roads, etc., by lotteries, and that it "is a mode of raising money that in our opinion ought not to be countenanced, and hardly to be admitted into practice upon the most pressing exigency of the state, more especially in the colonies, where the forms of government may not admit of those regulations and checks which are necessary to prevent fraud and abuse in a matter so peculiarly liable to them." They say they cannot, therefore, but disapprove these laws upon general principles; and when they considered the unguarded and loose manner in which they were framed, the objections were so many and so strong that they should have thought to have laid them before His Majesty for his disapprobation had they not been restrained by the consideration that the purposes for which they were passed, had been carried into full execution; and that it was their duty to desire that the governor would not for the future give his assent to any laws of the like nature.

Notwithstanding these objections, the general court extended this lottery for raising three hundred pounds more Feb. 24, 1763.

The first lottery to build Parker river bridge was managed by Thomas Berry, John Greenleaf, Joseph Greenleaf and Joseph Atkins, esquires. There were six thousand tickets, at two dollars each, which were sold by the managers and at various stores in Boston. The largest prize was a thousand dollars.

The second lottery was managed by Daniel Farnham, Caleb Cushing, Joseph Gerrish, William Atkins, esquires, and Patrick Tracy, merchant. This lottery will be found advertised in the Boston Gazette of May 19, 1760, the announcement being headed by one of the coarsest wood-cuts of a three-arch bridge ever seen. There were five thousand tickets, at the price of two dollars each; and sixteen hundred and fifty-five prizes. The largest prize was five hundred dollars.

The lottery for building the Parker river bridge was followed by an act of the province, passed Jan. 11, 1758, establishing a lottery to build bridges over the Saco and Pesumpscoot rivers, Sir William Pepperell being at the head of the managers. April 29 following, a lottery was created for raising money to pay the expense of the expedition against Canada. Then followed, in quick succession, other lotteries for various purposes, as for paving Boston Neck and Prince street in Boston, for removing rocks and shoals in Taunton great river, and for rebuilding Faneuil Hall after the great fire of 1761.

An act for raising the sum of thirty-two hundred pounds, by means of a lottery, for building a hall for the students of Harvard college to live in, was passed, June 25, 1766, and consented to by Governor Bernard after the Lords of Trade had so permitted. In their communication consenting to it, they state that "they are still of the opinion that lotteries in the American colonies ought not to be countenanced, and are fully convinced that the too frequent practice of such a mode of raising money will be introduction of great mischief; yet, in consideration of the general propriety and utility of the service to be provided for by the bill submitted for approval, we have no objection to your passing it into a law, desiring at the same time that it may be understood that such a permission shall not be drawn into precedent in any other case whatever."

Lotteries continued to be established for various public purposes, as for building paper, woolen and cotton mills; academies and schools; for the benefit of Harvard and Dartmouth colleges and Brown University; canals, streets and bridges; houses of religious worship, Congregational, Episcopal and Roman Catholic;* the Washington monument; for the improvement of beaches; the assistance of needy individuals, etc.

Finding that the lottery idea had been carried far enough, March 6, 1790, the general court passed an act speedily closing up those already established.

The act establishing the last lottery in Massachusetts was passed June 13, 1815. This was for the purpose of building a bridge over Connecticut river, between Springfield and West Springfield.

A road in Gloucester was built by the aid of a lottery in 1797.

In 1791, the proprietors of the cotton manufactory in Beverly, the first in America, were helped by the gift from the State of seven hundred tickets in two of the State's lotteries.

There is always an interest in winners of prizes in lotteries. A few names of such have come down to this generation. In 1786, upwards of a dozen poor widows of Marblehead were the fortunate owners of the ticket that drew a prize of fifteen hundred dollars. A poem on this occurrence, written in Marblehead, was published in the Columbian Centinel of April 24, 1790.

*An instance of the Roman Catholics thus raising money occurred in Philadelphia, early in the century.

Joseph Hovey of Boxford drew a prize of a thousand dollars in a State lottery in November, 1790. With this money, he purchased the farm which is now the site of the Barker Free School in West Boxford, where he afterward lived and died.

In 1817, the capital prize of ten thousand dollars in the Union Canal lottery was drawn by a ticket that had been sold in Newburyport in quarters. The owners of three of the quarters were Samuel Burrill, a tailor, Woodbridge Noyes, a "horse-letter," and Mrs. Bass, widow of Bishop Bass. The name of the owner of the remaining quarter has not come to the knowledge of the writer.

SPINNING IN THE OLDEN TIME.

BY ELIZA PHILBRICK.

WE have but a faint conception of the severe and varied labors of pioneer life. Nearly everything we use today we buy ready-made, while in the old days the colonists had to produce whatever they needed.

The first settlers of Essex County brought a limited supply of clothing and bedding with them, and some of the families brought their spinning wheels, on which they could manufacture yarn for the weaving of cloth on home-made hand-loom, which were probably constructed by carpenters here as soon as new apparel was needed. The great increase in population, and the diminishing intercourse with England made more necessary the home production of woollen and linen cloth. The first mention made of a spinning wheel here is in 1638, and the next year home-made clothing is mentioned. To be sure, leather was used to a some extent, and so continued for a century and a half. From that early date to comparatively recent times it was the custom, in the rural districts for the people to manufacture their ordinary clothing and the family linen.

The settlers first used the wild hemp that was made use of by the Indians for the manufacture of ropes and mats; and very soon had flax and hemp seed for sowing sent to them by their friends in England who were interested in the welfare of the colony.

Cotton was early imported from the West Indies; and sheep, for the production of wool, were early introduced. The general court allowed the owners of sheep the privilege of grazing them on the common lands, and dogs that had killed sheep were hung, and the owners of the guilty canines had also to pay twice the value of the sheep killed.

The general court ordered, May 13, 1640, that the magistrates and deputies of the several towns "make enquiry what seed is in every town, what men and women are skillful in the breaking, spinning, weaving, what means for the providing of wheels; and to consider with those skillful, in that manufacture, and what course may be taken for teaching the boys and girls in all towns the spinning of the yarn," also concerning the spinning and weaving of cotton wool.

The general court encouraged the raising of hemp and flax by offering premiums for cloth woven from material grown, spun and woven here. They also proposed that as much as possible of the wild hemp should be saved by the children and servants.

About this time (1641), Samuel Cornhill of Salem was allowed an acre of land for the cultivation of flax.

In 1642, the general court ordered the selectmen of each town to see that all of the children were taught spinning and weaving, and diligently exercised therein.

In May, 1656, the general court enacted "that all hands not necessarily employed on other occasions, as women, girls and boys, shall be and hereby are enjoined to spin according to their skill and ability, and that the selectmen in every town do consider the condition and capacity of every family, and accordingly to assess them as one or more spinners," and they must proportionately spin a certain quantity each week for thirty weeks each year.

Rowley soon exceeded all other towns in the colonies in the manufacture of cloth, taking the lead in 1643. The reason of this lay probably in the fact that the town was settled by some twenty or more families from Yorkshire, England, who had thoroughly learned the business of making cloth in the mother country. They brought with them gearing for a fulling mill, the first in America. This was used for finishing men's wear, the cloth being first woven at the homes of the people. There was a similar mill at Andover in 1673, and others at Ipswich and Salem in 1675. Experienced workmen came over to carry on the mills.

The people went to work earnestly, and there was not, at the beginning of the eighteenth century, one family in forty that did not spin and weave the cloth for their own clothing.

Early in 1706, one hundred and fifty-five dozen of cards and a large number of wool-combs, of wrought iron, were brought to New England. The first mention we find of any cards being made here is in 1747, when both wool and cotton cards were made and sold in Boston.

By 1745, the manufacture and use of home-spun woolen cloth was thoroughly incorporated into the domestic habits of the people. Most of the cloth was used at home, but a part was sold to the settlers on the frontier, who had not been able to produce it for themselves. This lessened the sales of the English merchants.

In 1751, the general court granted fifteen thousand pounds to erect a "spinning house" for the "Boston Society for Promoting Industry and Frugality." This was a school for the instruction of poor children. A similar and smaller school had been established a few years before for which the children were to be furnished by overseers of the poor, and the town was to pay expenses for three months. After that, the master was to allow them their earnings. The town provided twenty spinning wheels for the school. The Boston Society, of which Benjamin Lynde of Salem was a member, had one person come from each town for instruction. The business employed a variety of people for pulling flax, watering, breaking, swingling, hatchling, and spinning. At the fourth anniversary of the society, three hundred young ladies took their wheels on to Boston common and spun yarn, and weavers were at work with their looms.

The Stamp Act offended the American colonists so seriously that they pledged themselves not to import or use English goods, nor to eat lamb that wool might be more plenty for domestic manufacture.

In Newbury, the "Daughters of Liberty" held all-day sessions for spinning and weaving, sometimes as many as seventy linen wheels being employed.

As early as 1719, the English parliament passed a stringent law against exporting any tools or utensils used in the silk and woolen manufacture; and in 1774 all tools and implements used in cotton and linen manufacture, excepting wool-cards, were prohibited. These statutes were vigorously enforced, and proved serious obstacles to the introduction of machinery. Garments made of fabrics spun by the young lady weavers' own hands were emulously worn as proofs of patriotism. Spinning matches in Essex county were common occurrences for several years prior to the Revolution, and extraordinary achievements by the fair spinners are recorded. They also sometimes took their wheels to their neighbors' and spent the day socially and profitably.

As the implements of manufacture were comparatively rude, and many modern processes of manufacture and finish were as yet unknown, the fabrics made, whether woolen or linen, were more remarkable for service than elegance. The material was mostly grown upon the farms of the planters. The breaking and hatchling were done by the men, and the carding, spinning, weaving, bleaching and dyeing, by the wives and daughters of the planters. Beautiful and abundant stores of household linen were objects of laudable pride and emulation with all thrifty families.

Dyeing made the cloth quite ornamental. Indigo was the most common color. Samuel Diggadon of Salem made the coloring of cotton and linen yarn in English blue his business.

LINEN WHEEL.

The ancient implements for spinning linen were the spindle and distaff. The spindle was a round stick or rod of wood about a foot long, tapering toward each end, and having at one end a notch or slit in which the yarn might be caught or fixed. This end was held uppermost supported by the thread which was being spun, the upper end of the thread being slowly evolved from a handful of tow held in the same hand. The spindle was made to swiftly revolve by rolling it outwardly on the right thigh, by a quick stroke of the open right hand, the thread being slowly worked downward by the manipulation of wet fingers. Generally a ring or "whorl" of stone or clay was passed round the upper part of the spindle to give it momentum and steadiness in its rotary movement.

The distaff consisted of a stick larger and stronger than the spindle. The fibre was wound around one end of it in a loose coil or ball. The other end was carried under the left arm, or fixed in the girdle at the left side. Otherwise the implement and the principles of the movement were similar to the spindle. In the eastern countries this ancient method of spinning is still in vogue.

The first improvement in the implements of spinning was the placing of the spindle in a horizontal position in a frame between two upright supports, and made to rapidly revolve by a band passing around the spindle and over a large wheel, set in the same frame work, the large wheel being turned by one hand. This improvement was probably made about the thirteenth century, and is the same as the woolen wheel shown in the frontispiece. At first the wheel was made to revolve by taking hold of the spokes with the hand, but, soon after its invention, a round stick of wood about nine inches in length and an inch in diameter came into use. A little groove was formed near one end of the stick to prevent slipping from the spokes. This implement was called the "driver," or "finger." These wheels were rare until the sixteenth century.

At the beginning of the eighteenth century an improved wheel was in use among the Scotch in the northern part of Ireland. The wheel was smaller and narrower, thus having less resistance from the air, and was propelled by foot. When those Scotch immigrants came to New England, and especially to Essex county, where they settled, they brought these improved wheels with them. From that time the two wheels were used by our people. The large wheel, moved by hand, was used for spinning wool, being esteemed to be better adapted for that material; and the small wheel, propelled by foot, for spinning flax. So the old wheel came to be called "the woolen wheel," and the new one the "linen wheel." The linen wheel is shown herewith. No material improvement occurred in spinning machinery until the invention of the spinning jenny about 1767.

The advent of the Scotch-Irish, as the immigrants were called, caused a new impetus to be given to the linen manufacture, as they brought not only the foot wheel, but a better knowledge of the cultivation of flax and manufacture of linen. These new wheels were soon an appendage to almost every farm-house and cottage in the county.

Flax is an annual crop, and its seed is sown in the spring. The amount raised and the quality of the fibre depends upon the fertility of the soil and the time the plant is pulled. In early times the stalks, when pulled, were tied into loose bundles, all the roots being placed one way. These bundles were then laid in pools of water for the purpose of fermenting and rotting the woody part of the stalk, so that it would easily separate from the fibre. This required a period of about ten days. If it remained in the water too long the fibre would be injured by decay.

FLAX BRAKE.

When taken from the water the stalks were spread upon the grass to dry, and then put through a hand machine, herewith shown, called a "brake." This was about five feet in length, and consisted of two series of slats, one loosely fitting into the other. The flax was laid across the lower slats, and the woody stalks were broken into small pieces by letting the upper part of the "brake" fall upon them. This part of the work was severe as the upper part of the brake was made very heavy in order to give it force when it descended upon the flax.

Then came the swingling process, by which the woody fragments were beaten off with a wooden knife, called the "swingle knife," which was about two feet in length and three inches in width. A bunch of the flax was held in one hand and the swingle knife in the other, the operation being performed by cleaving strokes of the knife. Care was taken not to ravel or entangle the fibre. After this operation the fibre was called "swingle tow." A strong man could swingle about forty pounds in a day.

SWINGLE KNIFE.

But swingling did not leave it entirely free from the woody part of the stalk. To clear it wholly it had to be "hatcheled"; that is, combed through a long steel-toothed comb, technically called a "hatchel," but more commonly called in New England a tow or flax comb. Skill was required to do this.

HACHEL.

The operator took a strip of flax in one of his hands, by one end, threw the other end spread out over the comb, and drew the strip toward him, repeating the process until the woody portion and short fibres called tow were removed from that end. To clean the other end, the bundle of fibre was taken in the hand by the end already combed and the operation repeated. The cleaned long flax was called combed flax. If it was required to be very fine, as for cambric, etc., the fibre was afterward put through a finer comb.

The flax or tow was loosely wound around the distaff of the linen wheel, and from it was spun the yarn on the spindle. The distaff was fastened to the wheel frame by inserting the lower end of it into a hole bored in the frame near the spindle. During the operation the spinner frequently moistened the thread, by forefinger and thumb, with saliva or water, to more securely unite the fibre and improve the appearance of the yarn.

DISTAFF.

When the spindle was full the yarn was wound off, on a reel, into knots and skeins. The oldest and simplest reel was the hand reel, made of three sticks of wood, fastened by cords. The later and more complicated machine was the automatic clock reel, a useful and rapid instrument.

HAND REEL.

The skeins or hanks of yarn were then boiled in soapy water or potash to free it from impurities. For cotton a little flour was added to the boiling water to increase its firmness and tenacity, which linen does not require, its fibre being firm, long and tenacious.

CLOCK REEL.

The manufacture of yarn from wool is somewhat different from that from flax.

After the sheep were sheared the wool was oiled and made into rolls by hand cards, usually by women. It was very hard work, and so they occasionally had a "carding bee." The wool rolls were generally spun on the large wheel, though some used the small wheel for this purpose. A woman's stent in spinning wool was five skeins a day, and her pay fifty cents a week and board.

For knitting, woolen yarn was doubled and twisted, then thoroughly washed with hot water and soap, and bleached with brimstone.

Worsted yarn was made from the best long wool combed the same as tow, and not made into rolls, being spun on the small wheel. Cotton was carded into rolls, and spun on the large wheel.

The knack in spinning wool, which the old people used to talk about, says Doctor Norwood, in Quabbin, was only the experience requisite to a free movement of the arms, an elastic pose, and a long gliding step, advancing and retreating. The graceful movement of the arms of a harpist and the action of the lawn-tennis player are tame beside the damsel at the great wheel. Look at her as she is leaning forward, lightly poised upon the toe of the left foot. With her left hand she picks up, by the end, a long slender roll of soft wool, and deftly winds the fibres upon the point of the steel spindle before her. Now holding it an instant with thumb and finger, she gives a gentle motion to the wheel with the "driver" that she holds in her right hand. Meanwhile, she seizes the roll of wool, at a little distance from the spindle, and measures with practiced eye the length that will be required for a drawing. Then, while the hum of the wheel rises to a sound like the echo of wind in a storm, backward she steps, one, two, three, holding high the long yarn as it twists and quivers,—then, suddenly reversing the wheel, she glides from it with a long, even stride, and lets the yarn wind upon the spindle. Then another movement, a new pinch of the roll, a new turn of the wheel, and da capo. The backward and forward movement, the left hand controlling the yarn, while the right governed the wheel, was a most picturesque sight.

Shortly before 1800, machinery began to do all this work. In 1788, in Beverly, was established the first cotton mill in the United States; and in Newbury-Byfield, in 1794, the first woolen mill was built, of course, in both instances, with rude and imperfect machinery. Mills have silenced the buzz of the spinning wheel on the domestic hearth, and changed the character of the textile manufactures of the country, as well as the social habits of the people.

“The spinning wheel of the olden day
 Forgotten now in the corner stands;
 The bunch of flax is a dusty gray,
 And for years untouched by living hands,
 From each long spoke have the spiders spun
 A filmy web, but they, too, are old,
 And the rust of years have long begun
 On the hub of brass, once bright as gold.
 It is hard to turn the old wheel now,
 It slowly moves with a sorry creak;
 It seems like a voice so faint and low,—
 So long unused it can hardly speak.”

EARLY VOYAGING.

The dread of mystery exists today,
We feel its power though we deny its sway,
But less than in an earlier century,

When superstitious faiths were manifold,
And land and sea alike were deemed to be
By gods and demons jealously controlled.

To venture then across the trackless sea,
So fraught with danger and uncertainty,
As pilgrims went, in vessels small and old,
Parting from friends they loved so long and well,
And homeland they might nevermore behold,
Required a heart of courage naught could quell.

Our fathers plowed the sea with purpose firm;
No idle wind had wafted on the germ
That into powerful states was sure to grow,—
States to become a nation proud and strong;
And storm and tempest wild, and death and woe,
Deterred them not from right against the wrong.

Salem.

S. P.

THE GREAT STORM OF 1635.

This was the year of the great exodus from England to America. Many colonists had come early in the season, and planted their seed and cultivated the growing crop. Hay to a considerable extent had been harvested. During the whole of the second week of August the wind blew from the south-southwest with considerable force. At midnight of the fourteenth of the month, its course suddenly changed by way of the southeast to the northeast, and before daybreak a northeast rain storm set in. The wind had greatly increased in violence, blowing with terrific force, and the rain fell in torrents, sometimes with such fury that the ill-made houses of the settlers could hardly withstand its onslaughts. After the gale had continued five or six hours the wind changed to the northwest, and the tumultuous elements subsided.

The wind caused the tide to rise to a height the settlers had never observed, and which the Indians said they could not remember; and some of the shore houses were submerged.

A great number of trees were blown over or broken down, the stronger being torn up by their roots, and the tall pines and other brittle trees broken in the middle. Slender young oaks and good sized walnuts were twisted like withes, and Indian corn, upon which the people depended for their support the coming winter, was beaten down, and much of it destroyed, while it was hardly in the milk.

Among the many anecdotes told of the storm is that of an old man in Ipswich, who was accustomed to go to sea in a small boat, his only companion being a dog that he had taught to steer. As the storm increased in violence, the old man hoisted his sail and prepared to go down river in his little vessel. His neighbors endeavored to dissuade him from going, but he obstinately replied, "I will go to sea, though the devil was there." He went, but neither he nor his boat were ever seen again.

As many vessels bearing passengers and goods to the New World were on our coast several of them were wrecked by the storm. The Great Hope, belonging in Ipswich, England, of four hundred tons burden, was wrecked near Charlestown. The ship James, of Bristol, England, suffered severely, scarcely escaping destruction off the mouth of the Piscataqua river; and the ship Angel Gabriel, also from Bristol, was dashed to pieces on Pemaquid Point.

At this early period, there was a boat, a pinnace in build, belonging to Isaac Allerton, sailing regularly between the Piscataqua river and Boston. On Wednesday, two days before the storm, the boat sailed from Ipswich, where it had stopped on its trip to Boston. There were sixteen passengers and four mariners. The passengers were Rev. John Avery, his wife and six children,* and Mr. Avery's cousin Anthony Thacher, who had been in New England but a few weeks, his wife and four children,† another member of his family, and one other passenger.

*Winthrop and Mather say six, Hubbard five, and another writer says that there were eight children.

†One writer says nine.

Mr. Avery had been a minister of good repute in Wiltshire, England, and had come to Newbury, Mass., with the intention of becoming the pastor of that little colony, but concluded not to remain, after being strongly urged to settle in the ministry at Marblehead, and on this Wednesday he took the boat at Ipswich with his all on board for that purpose.

The laden craft sailed down the placid river, while behind them

“Pleasant, lay the clearings in the mellow summer morn,
With the newly planted orchards dropping their fruits first-born,
And the homesteads like green islands amid a sea of corn.

“Broad meadows reached out seaward the tided creeks between,
And hills rolled wave-like inland, with oaks and walnuts green;—
A fairer home, a goodlier land, their eyes had never seen.”

On entering the bay, the course was changed southerly, against the wind, which blew with such force that no advance could be made, even by tacking, which was attempted many times. On the evening of Friday, the fourteenth, after vainly striving to round Cape Ann, they found themselves in the same perilous position, the wind increasing in fury. At ten o'clock, their sails were rent, and anchors were cast. At midnight, the wind suddenly changed to the northeast, and a terrific gale and rain followed. The anchor dragged, and the boat and its cargo was driven over the dark and angry waves.

“Blotted out were all the coast lines, gone were rock, and wood and sand,
Grimly anxious stood the skipper with the rudder in his hand,
And questioned of the darkness what was sea and what was land.

“And the preacher heard his dear ones nestled round him weeping sore:
‘Never heed my little children! Christ is walking on before
To the pleasant land of heaven, where the sea shall be no more.’”

The boat was rushed on towards the rocky headlands, and soon struck upon a rock, being quickly dashed to pieces. This rock is off what is now Rockport, and has since been known as Crackwood's Ledge.*

When the vessel struck, Mr. Avery and his eldest son and Mr. Thacher and his daughter were thrown into the sea, and carried by a mighty wave upon a rock. They called to those in the boat to come to them, but the latter had scarcely time to discover the impotence of such an effort.

During the few moments that Mr. Avery and his three companions were upon the ledge, expecting every instant to be washed from their footing into the raging sea, he raised his eyes toward heaven, and uttered these memorable last words: “Lord, I cannot challenge a preservation of my life, but according to thy covenant I challenge Heaven.” The words had scarcely left his lips, when a gigantic wave lifted the vessel on high and as with giant arms dashed it upon the rock, at the same time washing from the ledge those who had gained momentary foothold upon it. Thus passed Mr. Avery and all his household to their eternal rest. Whittier put the incident into poetry, calling it the “Swan Song of Parson Avery,” from which the writer has freely quoted. Of this portion of the incident, he said:—

“There was wailing in the shallop, woman's wail and man's despair,
A crash of breaking timbers on the rocks so sharp and bare,
And, through it all, the murmur of Father Avery's prayer.

“From his struggle in the darkness with the wild waves and the blast,
On a rock, where every billow broke above him as it passed,
Alone, of all his household, the man of God was cast.

“There a comrade heard him praying, in the pause of wave and wind:
‘All my own have gone before me, and I linger just behind;

*For two hundred years it was supposed that Avery's Rock was the scene of the disaster, but it is now disproven. Crackwood's Ledge is some three hundred feet from Thacher's Island.

Not for life I ask, but only, for the rest thy ransomed find!

“In this night of death, I challenge the promise of thy word!

Let me see the great salvation of which mine ears have heard!

Let me pass from hence, forgiven, through the grace of Christ, our Lord!

“In the baptism of these waters wash white my every sin,

And let me follow up to thee my household and my kin!

Open the sea-gate of thy heaven, and let me enter in!

“When the Christian sings his death-song, all the listening heavens draw near,
And the angels, leaning over the walls of crystal, hear

How the notes so faint and broken swell to music in God's ear.

“The ear of God was open to his servant's last request;

As the strong wave swept him downward, the sweet hymn upward pressed,

And the soul of Father Avery went singing to its rest.”

The destruction of the vessel was so complete that there were few timbers for the drowning men, women and children to cling to. After beating about in the waves and the darkness, and being repeatedly thrown against the rocks, Mr. Thacher obtained a footing, and he fought his way to the shore. He looked around for his companions, but the darkness was scarcely penetrable, and his loud voice was mocked by the raging wind or drowned in the thunder of the waters. He soon saw pieces of the frame work of the vessel coming toward him, and when they struck a woman extricated herself and reached the shore in safety. It was his wife.

Together, in the rain and the blast, the two watched for signs of their companions, but none came. Of the twenty souls, they only were saved, their quartette of little ones having passed on with the rest. Sad and dejected they sought a resting-place under a sheltering bank. Some provisions and clothing came ashore, and, also, a “snapsack,” in which was a steel and flint, and some dry gun-powder. They built a fire, and made themselves as comfortable as they could under the sorrowful circumstances. When morning came, the wind went down, the waves subsided, and the August sun shed its hopeful rays over the stretch of ocean. In every direction but one the sea and sky met in their limitless range, and on the west was the mainland, but separated from them by a wide expanse of water. They were upon an island; and the main-land that could be seen was forest, inhabited only by its savage denizens. They had no means of reaching it, and signs of distress could awaken no response. The day passed, and another hopeless night reached its end. The second day of their imprisonment dawned; and before the sun again went down they were discovered by the people on board a passing vessel bound to Marblehead, taken on board, and carried thither.

On leaving the island, Mr. Thacher named it “Thacher's Woe,” and the next year it was granted to him by the general court. It has since borne his name.

A cradle and an embroidered scarlet broadcloth covering, saved from the wreck, are still preserved by his descendants in Yarmouth, Mass., where he settled.

The story of this ship-wreck was often told about the hearth-fires of the coast-dwellers in the long winter evenings of the years that followed; and the fishermen, with “grave and reverend faces,” recalled the ancient tale when they saw the white waves breaking over the fatal ledge.

NOTE.

“A Sloop with Wood from the Eastward was drove ashore at Plumb-Island on Saturday Night laft, — the People were faved, and it is expected the Veffel will be got off. We hear of no other Veffel being ashore: The Storm began fooner here than further Eastward, the Veffels that have arrived since not having it very fevere until Saturday Night, whereas we had it here from Thursday to Sunday Morning.”—Essex Gazette (Salem), Oct. 4, 1768.

NOTES.

“His Excellency Governor WENTWORTH came to Town Yesterday from Boston, and this Day sets out for his Government.”—Essex Gazette (Salem), Oct. 11, 1768.

Ebenezer Choate of Ipswich advertised, Oct. 3, 1768, that on the preceding Tuesday night a pair of fat oxen were stolen from his pasture and driven to “Cape-Ann Harbour,” where they were sold by a man who said his name was Samuel Williams. He was about five and a half feet in height, with short hair, somewhat dark, a little round-shouldered, somewhat bow-legged, and stooping, and wore a dark homespun cloth coat, a blue jacket, yellow leather breeches, light blue ribbed stockings, double-soled shoes, and large square brass buckles. He was supposed to be one Lindsey, well known in Ipswich, who was an old offender. One guinea reward was offered for his being brought to justice.—Essex Gazette, Oct. 4, 1768.

THE OLD GRIST-MILL.

Grass overgrown the old cart path
 Now leadeth to the mill,
 Whose mossy roof and blackened boards
 Display its old age still.

Around the vacant dam and wheel
 The trees now closely stand,
 And over all a large old elm
 Sends out a shielding hand.

Cobwebs and dust and tenants small Remain secure within;
 Without, is seen no sign to show
 The life that once had been.

As in the silent hall of death,
 E'en nature seems suppressed;
 While rust and dampness slowly cause
 The old mill's well-earned rest.

OLD PEABODY MILLS, TOPSFIELD.

BY JOHN H. TOWNE.

Lt. Francis Peabody, the ancestor of the American Peabodys, was born at St. Albans, Hertfordshire, England, in 1614. He came to America in 1635; lived first in Lynn, and then in Ipswich, in the Massachusetts Bay colony. In 1639, he removed to Hampton, N. H., where he lived until 1657, when he came to Topsfield, Mass. He was useful in the new place, and was chosen to the office of selectman, as well as town clerk, both of which offices he held many years.

March 4, 1664, the town voted that Lt. Peabody have liberty "to set up a grist mill and to flow so much of the town's common as is needful for a mill so long as the mill does stand and grind for the town." The next year (1665), Mr. Peabody established the mill on Pye brook.

Who can estimate the joy of the inhabitants at that early period of having a grist mill to accommodate them in the grinding of their rye and corn! It marked a new era in the history of the Topsfield commoners.

March 7, 1671, the town voted that it was "willing that Lieut. Peabody shall set up a saw mill provided it does not do damage to any of the townsmen in their meadows." The saw mill was built in 1672.

So far as the writer is able to learn, everything pertaining to these mills went along smoothly until 1691, when, the business having increased on account of the growth of the surrounding district, there was not a sufficient head of water during a part of the year to run the mills.

Howlett's brook, a branch of Pye brook, left the latter stream and ran off to the northeastward, a short distance above the Peabody mills. As, at that time, there was no mill on Howlett's brook, Mr. Peabody was granted by the town the privilege of building a dam across this branch a few rods below its parting from the main stream, providing he pay satisfactory damages to the adjoining owners by reason of his flowing their meadows.

The records speak of damages being received the following year by Thomas Dorman and sons, who had in 1690 erected a house within a few rods of the parting of the brook.* There was probably water power enough at the mills after the building of the dam as there are no papers showing the want of it for more than fifty years afterwards.

During the year 1698 (?), after faithfully serving his day and generation, Lt. Francis Peabody passed away full of years and honors. By his will, dated Jan. 20, 1695, he gives his son Isaac Peabody the mills and mill-yard, the dwelling-house by the mill, and other property.

The agreement under which damages caused by flowage were paid to Thomas Dorman, expired in 1700; and it was renewed by Isaac Peabody at that time and again in 1710. By the terms of the agreement, the water could be kept dammed from the last of September to the first of April, as high as was needed for the use of the mill. And it was further agreed "that when Mr. Baker and said Dorman do send word to said Peabody together to lower the water for them that they may mow the meadow that is commonly flowed by the mill dam the said Peabody is to lower the water such time as they may conveniently take off the hay of said meadow."

*This house was occupied for several years during the latter part of the eighteenth century by Asahel Smith, and here was born, July 12, 1771, his son Joseph, who was the father of the celebrated Joseph Smith, the noted founder of Mormonism in this country. The house, one hundred and eighty-five years old, was torn down by Francis C. Frame in 1875, and another was built upon the same spot.

Dec. 27, 1715, Capt. Thomas Baker applied to the courts at Salem to have damages allowed him by reason of having his meadows flowed on account of the dam, but the claim was not at that time allowed.

The mills were both run with more or less success until 1726, when Isaac Peabody died. By his will, dated Oct. 1, 1726, he gave to his son Joseph Peabody "my Grist and Saw Mills with all irons, wheels, stones, profits, privileges and appurtenances to the said mills belonging, also the Dwelling House and barn standing near the Gristmill, the mill-yard," etc.

When Joseph Peabody came into possession of the mills Mr. Baker renewed his demand for damages for flowing his meadows, and it was agreed the next year that Mr. Peabody should pay him eighteen shillings yearly; and this sum was paid to the Baker family for more than seventy years.

Until 1736, the Peabody grist-mill was the only one in the town. In that year, Thomas Howlett built one on Howlett's brook, the branch of Pye brook already mentioned; and three years later he added a saw-mill. These mills of Howlett's were at or near the present Donaldson grist-mill.

Joseph Peabody died June 7, 1755. By his will, dated Nov. 12, 1753, he gave all his real estate to his only son Jacob.

In the summer of 1760, the original grist-mill was torn down and a new one built on the same site, David Nelson performing the work. The millstones and some other things were put into the new mill.

In 1765, the old saw-mill was taken down and a new one built to take its place.

During the next few years, business in both mills flourished. Then there began to be a lack of water power on account of neglecting to keep in good condition the dam across the branch stream. In 1787, there was nothing left of the former dam but one stick of timber lying across the bed of the stream called a mud-sill. In September of that year, supposing that he had a right "in conformity with the grant of the town to Lieut. Peabody to build the dam," Jacob Peabody partially restored it. Mr. Hobbs, who then owned the Howlett mills, objected to this, and tore it down. The dam was repeatedly rebuilt, and as often torn down.

Mr. Peabody then entered the courts for redress, early in the next spring commencing an action of trespass against Mr. Hobbs. Two trials were had in the court of common pleas, and on exceptions the case went to the supreme court. Before a hearing was had in that court the parties agreed to leave the settlement of the contention to Nathaniel Lovejoy, Esq., Mr. Moody Bridges and Capt. Peter Osgood as referees. They made their report, which was accepted by the court in April, 1789. The decision was against Mr. Peabody, the report providing that the branch stream should be kept open.

In 1801, Joseph and John Batchelder, owners of the Baker farm at that date, brought suit against Mr. Peabody for flowing their meadows. The case was tried in November, of the same year, in the supreme judicial court at Salem and the plaintiffs were awarded ten dollars as part damages, the decree further providing that they should be paid three dollars yearly in the future. This amount was paid every year until 1870.

Jacob Peabody died Nov. 25, 1806, and by his will, dated Feb. 16, 1804, he gave the mills to his two sons, Jacob and John P. Peabody. These brothers continued the operation of the mills until the summer of 1824.

The grist-mill at this time being very much out of repair, needing a new water-wheel, set of mill-stones, new flume, etc., it was torn down and a new one, built. It was taken down in August and the new one, built on the same spot, was raised Sept. 25, 1824, the work being done by Ezra Dodge and others from Beverly. John P. Peabody took one-half of one of the original millstones for a door-step, which is still used for that purpose. The new millstones, weighing over three tons, were brought from Lynn. The cost of the new mill was $52.06.

The mills were run by the brothers until Feb. 14, 1829, when the mills had been in the Peabody family for one hundred and sixty-four years. On that date Jacob sold his farm and his interest in the mills to Hon. Nathan Dane of Beverly. Mr. Dane transferred the same to Samuel Bradstreet and Samuel Gould, as tenants in common, June 16, 1831.

April 12, 1836, Samuel Bradstreet sold his one-fourth interest to Samuel Gould, who owned another quarter. Mr. Gould sold his one-half to Jacob Towne Sept. 14, 1841. April 2, 1845, Mr. Towne having died, his administratrix and widow, Sophia Towne, conveyed this one-half interest to their son J. Waldo Towne.

During all the years after Jacob Peabody sold his interest in the mills in 1829, the other owner, John P. Peabody, continued to run them, paying rent to the different owners of Jacob's undivided half.

In 1842, the old saw-mill was taken down by Alfred P. Towne, and used for firewood.

Nov. 1, 1843, John P. Peabody sold his farm and one-half of the grist-mill to his son-in-law, Benjamin B. Towne, the mill having now been in the Peabody name one hundred and seventy-eight years.

In 1846, the old Peabody house by the mill in which Lt. Francis Peabody lived in 1660, was torn down by A. Porter Kneeland and others. Some of the boards and timbers taken therefrom were used in the construction of the house erected on that spot by J. Waldo Towne in 1847, which is now owned by George F. Pevear.

The mill was run by Benjamin B. and J. Waldo Towne until April 10, 1848, when they sold out to John McKenzie, who made extensive repairs, being a wheelwright. In 1850, he took out the old reversible water-wheel, sixteen feet in diameter, and put in a new circular tub-wheel.

When putting in the foundation for the new wheel, Mr. McKenzie found an old pine-tree shilling. This ancient coin was afterwards purchased by Dea. Joel R. Peabody and with some appropriate verses, written by his wife, was sent by him as a present to George Peabody, the eminent banker of London. Mrs. Peabody received in return a present of a silver pitcher lined with gold.

In 1851, after making many repairs, Mr. McKenzie added a corn-cracker, up to this time only clean grain having been ground. The introduction of the cracker marked a new epoch in the history of the mill. Not much corn was shelled after this, as thereafter kernels and cob were ground together.

Mr. McKenzie's health failing, he was assisted by John Boardman jr., his son-in-law.

The mill was run with good success until 1854, when Mr. McKenzie sold it to his son Alfred McKenzie, who lived in Danvers. The mill was then let on shares to Benjamin B. Towne, who ran it continuously, with the assistance of George W. Brown, until April 1, 1870. During this period, the principal repairs were the building of a new flume and bridge in 1857.

March 19, 1870, the property was sold to William Locke. He made some repairs upon the mill, putting in a new rim to the waterwheel, and substituting iron floats to the wheel instead of the wooden ones.

During the first portion of Mr. Locke's ownership, the mill was run by David Smith and Benjamin Austin Perkins, and then by Mr. Locke himself until July 17, 1873, when he conveyed the property to John B. Perry of Somerville.

Mr. Perry ran the mill until he sold it to Mrs. Licenetta Ham of Wakefield Aug. 19, 1875. During her ownership it was run by John B. Perry, Jr.

Mrs. Ham sold out to Mrs. Catharine Hanford of Lexington Jan. 4, 1876. The mill was run during her ownership by her son Clarence C. Hanford, who made some repairs.

June 27, 1883, Mrs. Hanford's interest in the property was sold to Leon F. Chamecin.

Oct. 2, 1883, Mr. Chamecin sold out to Mrs. Teresa C. Carr, the present owner.

The most successful period of the mill's history probably began with the introduction of the corn cracker in 1851, and ended in 1875, for during the civil war and for some years afterwards grain was very high, often bringing two dollars per bushel.

Many amusing incidents could be related in connection with this mill. Some people would come to the miller's house, and say in pleading tones, "I want to go to mill." Others would say, "I have come to get some meal ground." The writer's father, who was miller for many years, often spoke of a Linebrook parish man who occasionally came to mill. He generally rode in a two-wheel shay, and when coming down the turnpike hill by the grove he began to cry out in stentorian tones, "Where is the miller?" And this cry he repeated more or less frequently until he had reached the miller's house. If the miller was within an eighth of a mile, he would be almost sure to hear the cry. The old mill stands to-day in quiet repose. No busy sound is heard save that of the ceaseless flow of the running brook, bringing to mind the words of Tennyson:—

"For men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever."

The saw-mill has been gone for more than half a century, and the grist-mill, unless soon repaired, will also shortly be a thing of the past, and this ancient landmark will be obliterated forever. It is not probable that the grist-mill will ever be again rebuilt, although the water power may be utilized for some other purpose in the long distant future.

The frontispiece is a picture of the grist-mill as it appeared in 1895. Bennie B. Towne, of the eighth generation in descent from Lt. Francis Peabody is standing in the foreground.

AMESBURY INSCRIPTIONS.

UNION CEMETERY.

BEFORE 1663, the only cemetery in the present town of Amesbury was the ancient burial place on the western side of the Powow river, near its junction with the Merrimac, which has ever since been called Golgotha, though every trace of its use as a cemetery is gone, being now a field. Here the first settlers of the town found their final resting-place.

In 1663, the town of Amesbury bought an acre of land of Edmund Elliot for a burying-ground, it being what is now the eastern end of the ancient cemetery at Bartlett's corner. In the early days the church stood by its side or in it, and a few rods to the west was the Friends' cemetery, in which the poet Whittier's remains lie by the side of his family in their evergreen enclosure. In recent times the old cemetery has been enlarged so as to include the Friends' acre, and the latter is not to be distinguished from the rest of the yard except by the presence of some inconspicuous granite posts which mark the dividing line. The inscriptions in this old cemetery, still remaining, and bearing dates prior to 1800, are as follows:—

THE ABOLITIONISTS.

Whenever man, a slave decreed,
Down-pressed and trodden lies,
Great human hearts rise at the need
And end the sacrifice.

In our fair land, against the blight
Of such a human wrong,
With courage, zeal, and sense of right,
True men protested long.

They often bravely plead alone,
Alone the mob withstood,
Till love and sacrifice had grown
To fearless martyrhood.

Under the rod of social ban
They worked and spoke and prayed
Until by freedom's law a man
The negro slave was made.

Salem.

S. P.

HATHORNE PORTER.

BY REV. AARON PORTER.

Hathorne, son of Aaron and Eunice (Hathorne) Porter, was born in Salem, Mass., in a house which stood on the southwest corner of Lafayette and Porter streets, May 12, 1798. Porter street was named for Hathorne's father, who carried on the currying business in the lower story of his house, while his family resided in the upper rooms.

The father was very Puritanic in ideas and habits, being a devout member of the Tabernacle parish, though never uniting with any church, his constant reply to all solicitations in that direction being, "I am not good enough." Possibly he looked through all the religious forms and usages of his day and had glimpses of the spiritual truths that underlay them.

As illustrating his approval of the Christian Judaism which then constantly did, and even now at intervals does attempt to make the Lord's day identical with the Jewish Sabbath, it may be said that one Sunday he saw his daughter Mary crossing the yard, and because in approaching a bit of ice she quickened her pace, and slid once across this natural temptation, he felt in duty bound to apply the rod to his child. He acted from no domineering spirit, but religiously and conscientiously. At the age of more than four-score, against the advice of friends, he left off smoking as a testimony against the use of tobacco. He never chewed.

Hathorne was christened Samuel Hathorne, but when he came to man's estate discarded his first name, as he preferred one Christian name to two. Aaron, his oldest brother, went to sea in early life, and probably died in China. His other brothers and sisters who grew up were Andrew S., Israel P., Alfred R., Eunice, Mary and Sally. Hathorne, Andrew and Israel, when old enough, left their home and went to live with their paternal uncle, Zerubabel Porter, who carried on the tanning and currying business in Danvers, and lived in the house still standing in Putnamville where Gen. Moses Porter, a brother of Zerubabel, was born. This house was brought into the Porter family years before by marriage with the widow of Bartholomew Brown, who married their father, Benjamin Porter.

Hathorne commenced business for himself in Danversport, and was successful for a while; but at last he became insolvent. A failure in those days meant much more than now. The writer was not then old enough to understand anything about business matters; but he remembered very clearly the privation and reduction in family expenses which followed, extending even to New Year's presents and other indulgences for the children, and also the disappointment and mortification of his father through the rest of his life.

He was the first in Danvers to employ workmen in the shop, and workwomen in the house, from Ireland. Generally his workmen boarded in his own family, and always ate at his own table, no matter who were present. Such was his democracy.

Dec. 14, 1824, he married Mehitable Brown, a granddaughter, by her first husband, of the widow Brown, who was Hathorne's step-grandmother already mentioned. The officiating clergyman was Rev. Mr. Barnaby, then pastor of the Baptist church in Danversport, where Hathorne and his wife attended religious services until the coming of the Universalists.

Mr. Porter died in Danversport Sept. 17, 1845, at the age of forty-seven. His wife survived him for twenty-three years, passing on June 17, 1869, in her seventy-third year. To say that she was ever a loving, tender, patient, inspiring companion through her husband's life would be only repeating that which needs no affirming wherever they were known. Still she did not go with him to the fullest extent in all his abolition and other reformatory ideas. She did not break with the church for its unfaithfulness to reform to the same extent as did he. She had all a true woman's conservatism and all a true mother's instincts. She always with righteous impartiality divided among her children the word of truth,—suggestion, admonition, reproof, commendation.

With shame to himself the writer recalls her earnest asking his forgiveness for a punishment which most tired mothers would have thought perfectly just and proper, twenty-four hours after the punishment took place. Such was her Christian righteousness; and though not prominent at all as a reformer and abolitionist, yet was her devotion to every good cause not one whit less than that of her husband.

In early life, Mr. Porter was a Democrat in politics. In religion, he was a Universalist of the Hosea Ballou kind. He did his part financially and officially in erecting the first Universalist meeting-house in Danvers.*

When Garrison issued his trumpet call for the slave, Mr. Porter went straight from Democracy, as to name and form, into Abolitionism. Christianity, democracy, abolitionism,—these were prominent among the foundations of righteousness for his time and for him. The essence of all was in the first, the second and third were manifest issues from the first.

He died before the American slaves were legally emancipated. He died a Christian, a democrat and an abolitionist in the simple, primary, unsectarian use of all three of those much abused terms. He died, as he had lived, testifying constantly and consistently against all laws that held men in slavery politically, and against all churches that sanctioned such slavery ecclesiastically and against all social usages that justified human slavery. He was also a total abstainer from the use of all intoxicants as a beverage.

He belonged to the local town and county abolition and temperance societies of his time, and during the three years while he with his family lived in Vermont he was active and ready in private conversation, school-house meetings, and county conventions to bear testimony to the essential Christian righteousness struggling for existence. The eccentric but faithful Orson S. Murray, Henry C. Wright, Patten Davis, Jehial Claffin, B. W. Dyer and others were his frequent visitors in Randolph, Vt. And after his return to Danvers, school-house, meeting-house and grove witnessed his faithful testimony.

His death took place early in the morning and his funeral was held in the afternoon of the next day, Sept. 18th. Doubtless he would have preferred that no sectarian minister should have been specially called to attend it, but that perfect liberty for remarks or prayer should have been granted to every one, as was then the custom among the "come-outer" abolitionists, and is still the custom of the Quakers. But the widow, either of her own volition or upon suggestion of friends who were not abolitionists, preferred to have some ordained minister. The Universalist parish in Danversport had no settled pastor at that time. Rev. Joseph Eaton, the Baptist minister, who held not a theological, reformatory or abolition view in common with the deceased, and who was a comparative stranger, officiated.

Mr. Eaton's service was very perfunctory. It consisted of one formal prayer, in which there was not an allusion to the "peculiar" views of the deceased, reformatory, social, theological, by which he had lived and died. At the conclusion he immediately left for his home only two or three doors away, after giving with apparent reluctance the request of the widow that any one wishing to farther take part in the funeral service was at liberty to do so. The opportunity was improved by Jesse P. Harriman, another "come-outer,"* and a personal friend of the deceased. He paid a glowing tribute to the social virtues and Christian character of the dead, extolled his fidelity to the slave, and concluded by quoting or improvising the following couplet:—

"He lives on those eternal plains Where everlasting glory reigns."

SALEM AND IPSWICH BOUNDS.

The 27th of y^e first month 1643

At a meeting by vs whose names are vnderwritten chofen by the Townes of Salem & Ipswich & having full power from either Towne to agree & determine of the Bounds betweene the said Townes doe in the behalfe of each Towne agree & determine the fame as followeth—

*So far as the writer can recall to mind the names of the abolition cotemporaries and associates of the subject of this sketch residing in or near Danversport were as follows:—

Old Organizationists, Joseph Merrill, Jesse P. Harriman, John Hood, John Cutler, John Kenney, Richard Hood, William Endicott, David Mead, and James D. Black; New Organizationists, Dr. Eben Hunt, Alfred Ray Porter, William Alley, John A. Learoyd, Elias Savage and Peter Wait. The old organization was the Garrisonian, and the new that which finally issued in the Liberty party.

Both these organizations were abolition, though the old had the advantage of age, earnestness and logical consistency, and of accepting facts, both historical and contemporaneous, just as the mass of people accepted them. For instance, the popular belief, as of the courts, that the United States constitution upheld slavery, was that of the old organization abolitionists, while the new opposed it. But the greater moral earnestness of the old organization sometimes led its members into the sheerest sectarianism, as when Stephen S. Foster once declared in the writer's hearing, that "No man is an abolitionist unless he belong to the American Anti-Slavery Society, or to one of its auxiliaries!"

Imprimis we conceive that the meeting-howfes of the Two Townes stand from each other north north east halfe a poynt easterly and south south west halfe a poynt westerly whether it be exactly or noe we are fully agreed that the line betwixt the two Townes shall runn as followeth viz: from the bound tree neare John ffairefeilds howfe west north west halfe a poynt northerly and east south east halfe a poynt fouterly as the trees are marked both ways from the said bound tree.

CONTRACTIONS IN COLONIAL WRITINGS.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

Contractions are other than the authorized abbreviations of words. These were common during the first century of our history, and only gradually became obsolete.

A horizontal line written above a letter denoted that one or more letters which should have followed had been omitted. This was the ordinary rule when "mm" or "nn" were written together, and one "m" or "n" only, with the line above it, would be written. It is rarely or never found written above the full-height letters, such as b, d, t, etc. For example, the word "manner" was written "mañer."

"And" was sometimes written "ad", and the ordinary sign (&) was often used.

The letter b was frequently written instead of "ber"; d for "ded"; n for "ner"; o for "on"; p for "par", "per", "pir", "por", "pur", "pra", "pre," "pri", "pro", and "pru"; and q for "que" and "qui".

Superior letters, that is, small letters written above the line, was also a kind of abbreviation. In such cases, the word

*Under the will is written by the clerk of the court: "Testified upon oaths in Court & also yt the sd Jno Sandrs Left all the Rest of his estate to his wyfe."

This will has no signature of the testator. It seems to have been a nuncupative will.

"which" was written "w^{ch}", as well as "wch", "wh", and "whh"; "m" stood for "em"; "n" for "en"; "r" for "er", "ber", and "eir"; "s" for "is" and "as"; "t" for "at"; and "y" for "ey".

Syllables in the middle or at the end of words were sometimes written as superiors, though often without abbreviation.

The words "shall be" and "will be" were frequently written "shalbe" and "wilbe".

The article "ye" needs explanation. It is really "the", and should be so pronounced. The y in this word represents the Anglo-Saxon character which was equivalent to the English "th". When the Old English black-letter type replaced the Anglo-Saxon letters in the printing of English words, from its close resemblance to the Anglo-Saxon character for "th" the Old English Þ was substituted for it, and continued to be so used so long that people became accustomed to using the y for "th" in writing the article "the" and some other words.

24. Sarah Hart, who married George Norton Oct. 7, 1669, was a daughter of Thomas and Alice Hart, and was born in Ipswich in 1647. Thomas Hart was a tanner by trade, and one of the earlier settlers of Ipswich, being one of the commoners in 1641. He was born in 1606, and died in Ipswich March 8, 1673-4. His wife, Alice, born in 1612, died June 8, 1682.—Ed.

36. Rev. Hugh Peters², minister of Salem about 1636, afterwards executed by Charles II., had a brother William² of Boston, and was a son of William Peters¹ of Torrey, Cornwall, England. The young men came over in 1634. William's² son Andrew³, of Ipswich and Andover, came here some time after the arrival of Mary Beamsley, and an amusing account of Andrew's³ arrival and first experience of Boston mud is given in a private manuscript belonging to Rev. Anson Titus. He is called a young Holland by the lady who was watching, and his notice was attracted, leading to a marriage. Boston records would probably give other facts and dates.—*C. H. ATTEMPTED SALE OF PROVIDED SOUTHWICK.

THE ESSEX ANTIQUARIAN.

VOL. I.

SALEM, MASS., SEPTEMBER, 1897.

No. 9.

PERSECUTION OF THE QUAKERS IN ESSEX COUNTY.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

THE Society of Friends, or Quakers, has always been small, probably on account of the absence of much that attracts people to membership in other religious bodies, and the simplicity and quietness of their lives. They have neither creed, liturgy, clergy, nor sacrament; have given to woman a place equal to that of man; have sought to eliminate war, oaths, and litigation; and have always been a sober, industrious, thrifty, and truth-loving people.

The Society was founded by George Fox, in England, who began to preach in 1648; and about the first of July, 1656, Quakers first arrived in New England, landing at Boston. They were put into prison as soon as they reached the shore, and their books burned in the market place. There was as yet no statute against such believers, but the general court convened, and, October 14th, passed such an act, the preamble being as follows:—

“Whereas there is a cursed sect of heretics lately risen up in the world, which are commonly called Quakers; who take upon them to be immediately sent of God, and infallibly assisted by the spirit to speak and write blasphemous opinions, despising government and the order of God in church and commonwealth, speaking evil of dignities and reproaching and reviling magistrates and ministers, seeking to turn the people from the faith and gain proselytes to their pernicious ways.”

By this law, master-mariners were forbidden to bring into the “jurisdiction any known Quaker, or any other blasphemous heretics” under a fine of one hundred pounds, or imprisonment until it was paid, and to return such Quakers to the place from which they were taken. Quakers that came from without the court’s jurisdiction were ordered to be committed to the house of correction, being severely whipped at their entrance, and kept constantly at work, no one being suffered to speak to them during the time of their imprisonment, “which shall be no longer than necessity requireth.” It was further ordered that if any person knowingly imported into any harbor of the colony “any Quaker books or writings concerning their Devilish opinions,” they should be fined five pounds for each and every such book or writing; “and whoever shall disperse or conceal any such book or writing and it be found with him or her or in his or her house, and shall not immediately deliver it into the next magistrate” is to be fined five pounds; and “if any person within this colony take upon them the heretical opinions of the said Quakers” they were to be fined forty shillings; “and if they shall persist in the same and shall so again defend it,” four pounds; and if “they shall again so defend and maintain the said Quakers’ heretical opinions, they shall be committed to the house of correction till there be convenient passage to send them out of the land, being sentenced by the court of assistants to banishment.”

It would appear that Cassandra, wife of Lawrence Southwick of Salem, was the first in Essex county to become interested in the new faith, she being admonished by the quarterly court, June 30, 1657, for absenting herself from the church services. Their home was in the neighborhood of Aborn street, on the present Peabody line; Mr. Southwick being a manufacturer of glass and earthen ware.

The first missionary of the Friends in Essex county, as far as the writer has learned, was Josiah Hobart, who was preaching at Cape Ann Side (now Beverly) that summer, and there, probably, Mrs. Southwick heard the Quaker evangelist.

In that eventful summer, a Quaker craft, called the "Wood house," sailed from England to Boston, bearing among its passengers, Christopher Holder, William Brend, and a young man named John Copeland, names ever to be associated with the history of Salem. Holder and Copeland came to Salem a few weeks later, and being hospitably received by the Southwick family, the latter were committed to prison. Mr. Southwick was soon released to be dealt with by the church, but his wife served seven weeks and was let out upon paying a fine.

At the close of the church service, Sept. 21, 1657, Holder and Copeland attempted to address the congregation, but were seized and held until the following day when they were sent to Boston, where they received thirty stripes, inflicted with a knotted scourge, left three days without food or drink, and then imprisoned nine weeks.

Samuel Shattuck, whose house is still standing, and numbered 315 Essex street, opposed the arrest of Holder, and he, too, was imprisoned at Boston till he was released on bail.

These two preachers had their right ears cut off in Boston, Copeland was scourged at Plymouth, and in 1659, Holder was banished on pain of death. Soon after his arrival in America, Copeland said, in a letter to his parents, "Take no thought for me. The Lord's power hath over-shadowed me, and man I do not fear; for my trust is in the Lord who is become our shield and buckler, and exceeding great reward."

Oct. 14, 1657, another law was enacted, providing that if any Quaker should return after having been punished under the former law, he should have one of his ears cut off, and be kept at work in the house of correction till he be sent away at his own charge; and for a second offence, to have his other ear cut off, and kept at the house of correction as in the first instance; and every Quakeress to be whipped instead of suffering the loss of her ears; and for a third offence, whether male or female, their tongue should be bored with a hot iron, and they be kept at the house of correction as in former convictions.

William Brend,* who came in the vessel with Holder and Copeland, was a man of three-score and ten years. He began his missionary labors in Rhode Island, and worked his way toward Boston, preaching the gospel of repentance as he went. While passing through Plymouth he was severely scourged, his age exciting no compassion in the breasts of his persecutors. He continued north, and held meetings in Salem with William Leddra,† who is said to have been a Cornishman, though his home was in Barbadoes, and who, also, had come to New England as a Quaker preacher.

They were welcomed by several families in Salem, who sympathised with the new faith, Lawrence Southwick's and Nicholas Phelps' being the most prominent among them. Meetings were held, at which the strangers preached of repentance and forgiveness of sins through Christ, and of the joy of the spiritual life.

The evangelists were soon brought before the Salem court, and were asked, "Why and for what they came into these parts?" They answered, "To seek a godly seed. The Lord God said, 'Pass away to New England.'" At the same term of the court, June, 1658, they were presented for being at a "disorderly meeting" at the house of Nicholas Phelps, during the time of the service of the church. Mr. Phelps lived in Salem, near Phelps' crossing (now in West Peabody), and about five miles from Salem town. The preachers made their escape from the meeting, but were apprehended and brought to court. Upon their acknowledgment that they were Quakers, they were sent to the house of correction.

This meeting was probably held before May 19, 1658, when a new law was passed, providing that "Quakers and such accursed heretics arising among ourselves may be dealt with according to their deserts, and that their pestilential errors and practices may speedily be prevented." The act provided "that every such person professing any of their pernicious ways by speaking or writing, or by meeting on the Lord's day or any other time to strengthen themselves or reduce others to their diabolical doctrines," shall be fined, every person so meeting ten shillings, everyone speaking in such meeting five pounds, and any such person who has been punished by scourging or whipping under former laws to be kept at work in the house of correction till they give bond with sureties "that they will not any more vent their hateful errors or use their sinful practices," or else shall depart out of the jurisdiction and stay there.

All those present at this Quaker meeting were summoned into court, and a large number of them came in and stood with their hats on, until the officer pulled them off. Nicholas Phelps, Lawrence Southwick and his wife and son Josiah, Samuel Shattuck, Samuel Gaskin* and Joshua Buffum stood up in the open court, in the face of this law and of the magistrates, and made "a good confession" that they were Quakers. Mr. Phelps uttered a few words in defence of the meeting; and for daring thus to answer was fined. For their connection with the meeting and for professing the Quaker faith, all seven were sent to the house of correction in Boston. Others at this meeting and fined were Mrs. Anthony Needham, Mrs. Nicholas Phelps, Mrs. Joseph Pope, Henry Trask, Daniel Southwick, Thomas Brackett, Mrs. Samuel Shattuck, Mrs. Isaac Page of Salem and Robert Adams of Newbury; and Provided Southwick was sentenced to sit by her heels in the stocks an hour besides being fined. Others present who were not punished were Mrs. Henry Trask, Mrs. George Gardner, John Southwick, Joseph Pope, Anthony Needham, Edward Wharton, Mrs. Robert Buffum and John Hill.

All through the score of years that followed, these people, with new sympathisers from time to time, were brought before the court and fined for "absence from meeting," sometimes heavily, as in the case of Mrs. Phelps, who was fined, in 1659, ten pounds.

The preachers, Brend and Leddra, were confined at Boston. While imprisoned, Brend was so brutally beaten with a pitched rope by the jailer, who had kept him without food for five days and most cruelly fettered him, that he was apparently dying. Endicott was alarmed, and summoned a physician, who concluded that the prisoner was beyond recovery. The floggings in the prison had been repeatedly so cruel, that at the terrible scourging in this instance, the public became so indignant, that the officials released the Quaker prisoners, Brend, Leddra and others, and banished them on pain of death.

But the unseen Healer had more labors in store for the aged Brend, and he rose from his sick cot, and left the colony, afterwards preaching in Rhode Island and the West Indies. In 1662, he was one of the hundreds of Friends confined in loathsome Newgate prison. At the age of ninety, he died; and the following is the record of his burial: "William Brend, of the Liberty of Katherine's, near the Tower, a minister, died Seventh mo., Seventh, 1676, and was buried at Bunhill Fields."

The beautiful spirit of this venerable pilgrim is shown in his writings, in one of which, written in prison, he says, "It hath been upon my heart, when in the sweet repose of the streams of my Father's love and life, by which my heart hath been overcome, to visit you with a loving salutation from the place of my outward bonds. * * Oh, in the love and life of the Lamb, look over all weakness in one another, as God doth look over all the weakness in every one of us, and doth love us for his own Son's sake—in so doing peace will abound in our borders, it will flow forth amongst us like a river, and it will keep out jars, strifes and contentions."

Leddra returned into the colony a year later, was arrested and kept chained in the open prison in Boston for many months, notwithstanding the inclemency of a New England winter, while awaiting the execution of his sentence of death.

On the day before he was hung, he addressed a letter to "The little flock of Christ," in which he said: "Stand in the watch within in the fear of the Lord, which is the very entrance of wisdom and the state wherein you are ready to receive the secrets of the Lord. Hunger and thirst patiently, be not weary, neither doubt; stand still and cease from thy own workings, and in due time thou shalt enter into rest and thy eyes shall behold His salvation. Confess Him before men; bring all things to the light that they may be proved whether they are wrought in God. Without grace possessed there is no assurance of salvation. By grace you are saved."

The following day, the fetters that had so long bound him were knocked off, and he went "forth to the slaughter in the meekness of the spirit of Jesus." His last words, from the scaffold, were: "I commend my righteous cause unto Thee, O God! Lord Jesus receive my spirit."

When Leddra was being sentenced, Wenlock Christison of Salem, who had also been banished, entered the court room, causing such consternation that no one moved or spoke for several minutes. He was then, also, placed to the bar, and condemned to die; but on the day preceding that fixed for his execution, tidings came from England which caused him and others to be banished instead of hung.

The seven Salem prisoners, committed to the house of correction in Boston in June, 1658, remained there all through the heat of the summer, from their husbandry. After three weeks' imprisonment, they wrote to the Salem court as follows:—

"This to Magistrates at the court in Salem.

"Friends:—Whereas it was your pleasure to commit us, whose names are underwritten, to the house of correction in Boston, although the Lord, the righteous Judge of Heaven and Earth, is our witness that we have done nothing worthy of stripes or of bonds; and we being committed by your court to be dealt withal as the law provides for foreign Quakers, as ye please to term us; and having some of us suffered your law and pleasures, now that which we do expect is, That whereas we have suffered your law, so now to be set free by the same law, as your manner is with strangers, and not to put us on the account of one law, and execute another law upon us, of which according to your own manner we were never convicted, as the law expresses. If you had sent us upon the account of your new law, we should have expected the jailer's order to have been on that account, which that it was not appears by the warrant which we have, and the punishment which we bear, as four of us were whipped, among whom was one that had formerly been whipped; so now according to your former law, friends, let it not be a small thing in your eyes, the exposing as much as in you lies, our families to ruin. It is not unknown to you, the season and the time of year, for those that live of husbandry, and what their cattle and families may be exposed unto; and also such as live upon trade. We know if the spirit of Christ did dwell and rule in you these things would take impression on your spirits. What our lives and conversations have been in that place is well known, and what we now suffer for, is much for false reports, and ungrounded jealousies of heresy and sedition. These things lie upon us to lay before you. As for our parts we have true peace and rest in the Lord in all our sufferings, and are made willing in the power and strength of God, freely to offer up our lives in this cause of God, for which we suffer: yea, and we do find (through grace) the enlargement of God in our imprisoned state, to whom alone we commit ourselves and our families, for the disposing of us according to his infinite wisdom and pleasure, in whose love is our rest and life. From the house of bondage in Boston wherein we are made captives by the wills of men, although made free by the Son (John 8: 36). In which we quietly rest, this 16th of the 5th month, 1658.

“Lawrence Southick,
Cassandra Southick,
Josiah Southick,
Samuel Shattock,
Joshua Buffum.”

Whether or not Gaskin had been released, the writer has not learned, but his name is not seen again in connection with the others. Neither does it appear why Nicholas Phelps did not sign this letter. Soon after, the prisoners were transferred to the Ipswich house of correction.

Oct. 19, 1658, the general court, becoming convinced that the terrible laws that had been enacted were insufficient to stop the preaching of the Quakers, and “for the further prevention of infection and guiding of people in the truth,” passed a law banishing all persons “favoring the Quakers who after due means of conviction remain obstinate and pertinacious,” and Rev. John Norton was appointed to speedily undertake to convince them of their errors.

On this same day (Oct. 19, 1658), the general court, finding that the seven Salem Quakers who were in the Ipswich house of correction would do nothing to effect their release, ordered that they be brought into court. This was done; and much endeavor to convince and reform the prisoners was made; but in vain. The court then ordered that Samuel Shattuck, Lawrence Southwick and his wife depart out of the jurisdiction “before the first day of the court of election next, which, if they neglect or refuse to do, they shall then be banished under pain of death.” Under this order they were released from prison, and, returning to their homes, cared for their suffering families and farms. The time of their probation was about at an end when, May 11, 1659, the seven were called before the court. The governor charged them with rebelling against the authority of the country in not departing according to the order. They answered that they had no other place to go to, and had their wives, children and estates to care for; nor had they done anything worthy of death, banishment or bonds, or any of the hardships or ignominious punishments which they had suffered in their persons, besides the loss of a large amount of money and property that had been taken to pay fines. The governor was silenced; but Major-general Dennison made this unanswerable reply, that they stood against the authority of the country in not submitting to its laws; that “they and the church people are not able well to live together; at present the power is in our hand, and therefore the strongest must fend off.” The sentence of banishment was then pronounced upon them, and only two weeks’ time was allowed in which to settle their affairs and bid good-bye forever to their families and friends and home.

Lawrence Southwick and his wife, in their old age, parted from their children, and with but little money and few articles, the fines of the court having taken much of their estate, secured a boat and sailed southward along the coast. They finally built a little house on Shelter Island, in Long Island Sound; and there passed the few months of their exile. The privation and exposure that they experienced during the rigorous winter that followed was too severe for their aged and weakened bodies, and both died in the following spring, his wife surviving him three days.

On the day that Lawrence Southwick and his wife and friends were sentenced to banishment, the court ordered that Mr. and Mrs. Southwick's younger children, Daniel, aged twenty-two, and Provided, aged eighteen, be sold into slavery to the English in Virginia or Barbadoes. This was because these young people could not pay the heavy fines imposed upon them "for siding with the Quakers, and absenting themselves from public ordinances," and as a means of satisfaction of the fines. They were offered for sale as slaves to the sea captains who might carry them to the West Indies and dispose of them at a profit. But no one would buy them; and the brother and sister were released.

Whittier wrote a ballad on this incident, entitling it with the mother's name, "Cassandra Southwick," instead of the daughter's. He represents Provided as being offered for sale near the wharves in the presence of Endicott, Rawson, Higginson, and many others. An old woodcut illustrating it is reproduced herewith.

Josiah Southwick and Joshua Buffum went to Rhode Island, the home of many an exile from the Massachusetts Bay colony. Southwick returned from banishment, and, Sept. 9, 1661, was ordered by the court of assistants to be stripped from his girdle upwards, tied to a cart's tail, and whipped ten stripes in each of the towns of Boston, Roxbury and Dedham. When sentenced to a severe scourging, he said: "Here is my body; if you want a further testimony to the truth I profess, take it and tear it in pieces; your sentence is no more terrifying to me than if you had taken a feather and blown it in the air."

Samuel Shattuck and Nicholas Phelps took advantage of an opportunity that offered, four days later, to sail for England, with the intention of laying the whole matter before parliament; and, late in 1661, Shattuck secured and brought to New England a letter from the king requiring the colony to cease proceedings against the Quakers.

This letter caused a suspension of the obnoxious laws, and the prisoners were set at liberty. Simon Bradstreet and two other representatives of the colony were sent to England to inform his majesty of the prisoners' release, and to deprecate his displeasure. In 1675, however, the law was so far revived that persons attending Quaker meetings could be punished therefor; and the death penalty was not repealed until 1681.

Other laws than those mentioned were in force. In May, 1657, the law forbidding hospitality to Quakers was passed; and under it several persons were convicted. Among them was Zaccheus Gould of Topsfield, and Thomas Macy of Salisbury, in 1659, and John Emery of Newbury, in 1663. The Quakers whom they entertained were generally those that were on their way to the more hospitable wilderness of Maine. May 22, 1661, was enacted a law providing that Quakers without homes in the colony should be punished for the first offence by whipping, second, by branding, and third, by death.

It cannot seem strange that some of the sufferers under the Quaker laws should become so insane as to appear naked in public, under an idea that it was their duty to thus declare the lack of spiritual apparel of New England's established church.

"The Quaker of the olden time!
So calm, and firm, and true,
Unspotted by its wrong and crime,
He walked the dark earth through;
The lust of power, the love of gain,
The thousand lures of sin
Around him had no power to stain
The purity within."

THE ANCESTOR.

While I meander in and out
The labyrinth of ancient date,
Sometimes I catch him on the fly;
Sometimes he goes sedately by,
Or scans me closely with his eyes;
Or greets me with a glad surprise
That I should know him—strangers we.
Where did we meet before? says he.

ANSWERS.

46. Mary Cross, who married Benjamin Carrill, in Ipswich, March 3, 1701-2, was daughter of Robert and Martha (Treadwell) Cross of Ipswich, and granddaughter of Robert and Hannah (Jordan) Cross of the same place. The first Robert Cross was born about 1613, and was living in Ipswich as early as 1637. His wife Hannah was daughter of Stephen Jordan. She died Oct. 29, 1677; and Mr. Cross married, secondly, Mary ——. Both Mr. Cross and his wife Mary were living in 1697. His son Robert was born about 1641, and died about 1713. He married Martha Treadwell Feb. 19, 1664. She was born March 16, 1643-4; and died March 3, 1738, aged ninety-three.—Ed.

64. See answer to 46 above.

74. Jane Nelson, born in the west parish of Rowley (now Georgetown) in 1732, was the eldest daughter and third child of Solomon and Mercy (Chaplin) Nelson. Her great-grandfather, Thomas Nelson, born in England in 1638, was brought by his father Thomas to Salem in December of that year. Thomas, the father, was very prominent in the settlement of Rowley in the following spring. Solomon Nelson, the father of Jane, was born in Rowley, but for a few years previous to her birth was a resident and original settler of that part of Mendon, Mass., now Hopedale, but returned and settled, in 1730, on what is now Nelson street, in South Georgetown, on the farm where the writer resides. Jane Nelson married, about 1750, William Chandler of Andover, a cousin of Rev. James Chandler, the first minister of the Congregational church in Georgetown. William Chandler was of sedentary pursuits, and a school teacher in Georgetown a century and a quarter ago. Late in life he lived in Salem, and after his death his widow returned to Georgetown, dying of cancer in the house of her brother, Maj. Asa Nelson (the writer's great-grandfather), where she was born about seventy-eight years before. William, her son, to whom this query refers, lived in Salem, was a goldsmith, and prominent in the Masonic order, but unfortunately addicted to the excessive use of intoxicants. Jeremiah, the only other son, was a soldier of the Revolution, and in service in Pennsylvania. He outlived the war, but never returned, settling in that state or in the South, and leaving a wife and family in Rowley.—Henry M. Nelson, Georgetown.

THE CHARM OF RESEARCH.

To weave together the fading dates of old manuscripts with the traditions that have survived sleeping generations, until the joy and the tears, the quaint speech and early piety, stand out upon the tapestry in the semblance of a living man—this gives a pleasure which he only who has stood at the loom can feel and understand.—Charles Knowles Bolton.

"OLD TUNNEL" MEETING HOUSE, LYNN.

VOL. I.

SALEM, MASS., OCTOBER, 1897.

No. 10.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE FIRST CHURCH IN LYNN.*

IN the first settlement of Lynn the people either attended religious services at Salem or social meetings at farm houses.

Among the settlers was Christopher Hussey, whose wife's father was Rev. Stephen Bachiler. Mr. Bachiler was born in England in 1561, and received orders in the established church. He had acquired a good reputation, when he became dissatisfied with some of the religious ceremonies, and refused to observe them. He was then deprived of his benefice. Following John Robinson, he removed with his family and a number of his parishioners to Holland, where they resided for several years. Returning to London, they sailed for New England March 9, 1632, and arrived in Boston June 5th. They at once came to Lynn, and with such other of the inhabitants as chose to join with them they organized the first church in Lynn, which was the second in the county. Without installation, or invitation of the settlers even, Mr. Bachiler entered upon the duties of minister. This was all done by June 8th, just three days after Mr. Bachiler landed in America; and it indicates his vigor at the age of seventy-one.

Mr. Bachiler immediately began the construction of a house of worship, which was built probably within the year. It stood near the northeasterly corner of Shepard and Summer streets, and was about twenty feet square, probably with a common pitch roof, without cupola or bell. It stood in a small hollow, partly below the surface, having steps leading down to it, causing some persons to describe it as a basement. This was probably done to protect it as much as possible from cold winds.

After preaching here about four months, Mr. Bachiler's ways and manners became such that he was cited before the court, and forbidden to preach any more in public in the colony, "till some scandals be removed." He was finally dismissed at his own request; but immediately renewed the covenant with the six members who came with him, and continued his ministrations. The other members complained to the court, which forbade him proceeding, and later obliged him to leave the town, he having been in Lynn about four years in all. He removed, in February, 1636, to Ipswich, where he had some prospect of settling in the ministry; but some difficulties arose, and his opportunity was lost. In the rigorous winter of 1637, with some of his friends, he went on foot to Yarmouth, about a hundred miles distant, for the purpose of planting a town and establishing a church, but difficulties again forbade. He then returned, and took up his abode in Newbury. Sept. 6. 1638, the general court gave him liberty to settle Winnecunnet, now Hampton, N. H. He removed thither the following summer, the six church members that had come from England with him accompanying him. The town was planted, and a church gathered, Mr. Bachiler becoming the minister. He soon had trouble with the church, and was dismissed. He returned to England in 1651; and died at Hackney, near London, in 1660, in his hundredth year. He was a man of education, strong will and quick temper.

Mr. Bachiler's successor was Rev. Samuel Whiting, son of Sir John Whiting, mayor of old Boston, Lincolnshire, England, where he was born Nov. 20, 1597. He graduated at Emanuel college in 1616, receiving the degree of A. M. in 1620, and subsequently that of D. D., and took orders in the Church of England soon after his graduation, becoming chaplain in a family in Norfolk. After three years he became colleague to the rector in Lynn Regis. He remained there three years, and then became a non-conformist, subjecting himself to the censure of the bishop of Norwich. He was induced to resign, and remove to the parish of Skirbick, near his native place, where he again came under censure for the same cause. In 1636 his situation became so uncomfortable that he resigned, and emigrated to America, arriving at Boston May 26th of the same year. Nov. 8th following, at the age of thirty-nine, he was installed over the church at Lynn, then consisting of only six members.

The next year Rev. Thomas Cobbett, who had been a friend of Mr. Whiting in England, was made his colleague. Mr. Cobbett was born in Newbury, England, of poor parents, in 1608. He entered Oxford college, but left during the great sickness of 1625, and became a pupil of Doctor Twiss in his native town. He became a minister of the Established Church, but, after suffering for non-conforming opinions, emigrated to New England, arriving May 26, 1637. He remained as colleague with Mr. Whiting nineteen years, Mr. Whiting being the pastor and Mr. Cobbett the teacher. In 1656 Mr. Cobbett relinquished his connection with the Lynn church, and removed to Ipswich, where he afterward preached twenty-nine years. He died there Nov. 5, 1685. He possessed good abilities, and wrote more books than any other of the early ministers of New England. He preached the election sermon in 1649 and 1666. He was a devout man, and fervent in prayer.

Mr. Whiting was greatly relieved of the care of temporal things by his discreet and frugal wife. She was a sister of Oliver St. John, chief-justice of England during the commonwealth, and Oliver Cromwell was her own cousin. Mr. Whiting lived nearly opposite the meeting house on Shepard street, and both himself and wife lie buried in the old cemetery. They did all they could to refine the manners and tastes and elevate the condition of every class, and to advance all material interests. Mr. Whiting was a man of innate goodness and personal control, being noted for his patience. His style of preaching was mild and persuasive, though ardent; and his countenance was always illumined with a smile. He was a man of learning, being an excellent Hebrew scholar, and the author of several books. He died Dec. 11, 1679, at the age of eighty-two, and after a ministry in Lynn of forty-three years.

The next pastor was Rev. Jeremiah Shepard, of Cambridge, Mass., son of "the gracious" Rev. Thomas Shepard of Cambridge, formerly of Towcester, England. He was born in Cambridge Aug. 11, 1648; graduated at Harvard college in 1669; and preached, first, in Rowley, from 1673 to 1677, and then in Chebacco parish, in Ipswich, where he remained a year or two. He came to Lynn to preach for Mr. Whiting during his illness in 1679; and after Mr. Whiting's decease was ordained pastor of the church, Oct. 6 1680. Rev. Joseph

Whiting, son of his predecessor, was also installed as his colleague on the same day. He graduated at Harvard college in 1661. The next year after his installation he removed to Southampton, L. I.

The little old meeting house as it was nearing its fiftieth year was becoming too small for the increasing congregation. In it, probably, town meetings had always been held; and in 1641 the town voted that the meeting house be used as a watch-house. The erection of a new building was contemplated soon after the settlement of Mr. Shepard. It was erected in 1682; and the old building was sold and

The new meeting house, known as the "Old Tunnel," because of the likeness of its roof to an inverted cone, stood on the common, about a hundred feet west of Whiting street, in front of the present residence of Doctor Holbrook. It was forty-four by fifty feet. It had folding doors on three sides, without porches; and the top of each door was formed into two semi-circular arches. The windows consisted of diamond-shaped panes set in lead. In the northeast corner of the gallery was the "negro pew." The pulpit was large enough to seat ten persons. The floor was at first supplied with seats, removed entire to the northwest corner of Sea and Market streets, fronting on Sea street, where it was at that time or subsequently raised and added to at the end, together with a leanto in the rear. This thus became the house in which the late Timothy Alley lived and died. The house was afterward removed to the northerly side of Harbor street; and after being a tenement house for many years was taken down in April, 1896. The old church was the chamber at the right-hand of the picture, running to the left as far as the door.

then from time to time, as the town gave permission, pews were built by individuals, who were left to their own devices as to material, style and position. After a while the effect was extraordinary. Some of the pews were square, others oblong, some of oak, others of pine, some were large and some small. Galleries were on three sides, supported by six oak columns, and guarded by a turned balustrade, and reached by two flights of stairs, one in each corner. Overhead it was unceiled for many years, and exhibited enormous beams of oak traversing the roof in all directions. A small bell swung in the little tower, and was rung by a rope in the centre of the meeting house floor. This bell was sent to England in 1699, in exchange for a new one. In 1816 another bell was obtained of Paul Revere and Sons. In 1716 porches were added to the doors, and a curiously carved and paneled oak pulpit was imported from England. Town meetings were held in this building until 1805.

Mr. Shepard resided at first in Shepard street, and afterward built a house, which was burned, on the north side of the common, between Mall and Park streets. He was a plain, honest man, of unvaried piety, and was indefatigable in his exertions for the spiritual welfare of his people, as well as for their temporal prosperity. He was much interested in public affairs, an excited leader of the people of Lynn against Andros, and a member of the general court in 1689, upon the resumption of the old colonial government. He was successful in his ministry, which continued in Lynn for forty years. He died June 3, 1720, aged seventy-two; and his death was deeply mourned.

Up to this time this was the only church in Lynn, the Lynnfield parish being the first to be set off.

Mr. Shepard's successor was Rev. Nathaniel Henchman of Boston. He was son of Nathaniel Henchman, a book-binder, and deacon of a church in Boston, where Nathaniel was born Nov. 22, 1700. He graduated at Harvard college in 1717; and was ordained over this church in December, 1720, at the age of twenty. He resided on North Common street, between Mall and Park streets, and in 1855 his house (which he built) was removed to Park street, a few rods south of the brook. He was genial in his manners, and a man of extensive learning, of integrity and virtue. He early secured the esteem and confidence of his people; though, being strongly attached to regularity and order, and disinclined to entertain any species of enthusiasm or innovation, and having peculiar notions of ministerial rights and duties. Under his charge the church membership ran down to eighteen. After a service of forty-one years, Mr. Henchman died at his house on North Common street Dec. 23, 1761, at the age of sixty-one.

MEETING HOUSE, 1827-1837.

His successor was Rev. John Treadwell, who was born in Ipswich, Mass., Sept. 20, 1738, and graduated at Harvard college in 1758. He was ordained over this church March 2, 1763. Mr. Treadwell had genial manners, and he delighted to indulge in pleasantries, being possessed of considerable wit. He was a lover of New England, and of its government, and upon the general recommendation of the provincial congress in June, 1775, he always carried his musket and military accoutrements into the pulpit on Sundays and other days of religious worship. He resigned his pastorate in 1782, after nineteen years of service, and, returning to his native town, taught school there for two years, subsequently removing to Salem, where he became a state senator, and judge of the court of common pleas, and died Jan. 5, 1811.

The next pastor was Rev. Obadiah Parsons, who was born in Gloucester April 5, 1747, and graduated at Harvard college in 1768. He was at first pastor of the Squam parish in his native town, and was settled over the church in Lynn Feb. 4, 1784. In 1791, the deacons and some other members of the church joined the Methodist church, carrying with them the communion plate, which was subsequently returned. The church was thus reduced to three male members. One deacon and some others came back three years later. Mr. Parsons left Gloucester on account of charges of immorality against him; and some scandals in Lynn hastened his removal from the church here. He was dismissed July 16, 1792, after a service in Lynn of eight years. He returned to Gloucester, where he subsequently taught school, as he had done at Lynn while preaching there, and died in December, 1801. He was a man of talent and learning, and possessed pleasing manners. He resided in Lynn in the Lindsay house on South Common street, which occupied the site of the present State armory.

Mr. Parsons' successor was Rev. Thomas Cushing Thacher, son of Rev. Peter Thacher, minister of the Brattle street church in Boston. He was born in Malden Oct. 11, 1771; graduated at Harvard college in 1790; and installed Aug. 13, 1794. He was affable in his social relations, though inclined to asperity in his controversial writings, and was well esteemed by his people. After a service in Lynn of nineteen years, he was dismissed Feb. 3, 1813, and he removed to Cambridge, where he died Sept. 24, 1849, at the age of seventy-seven.

The next minister was Rev. Isaac Hurd of Charlestown, where he was born in December, 1785. He graduated at Harvard college in 1806, and was ordained over this church Sept. 15, 1813. His religious views were inclined toward Unitarianism, and soon the church was similarly affected by his preaching. Its condition became so low that, at the time of his dismissal, May 22, 1816, the matter of disbanding was agitated. He removed to Exeter, N. H., and was there installed over the Second church Sept. 11, 1817, remaining there till his death, Oct. 4, 1856, at the age of seventy.

Mr. Hurd's successor was Rev. Otis Rockwood, who was ordained July 1, 1818. In him the church secured a sound Trinitarian preacher of the high Calvinist type; firm in his faith and denominational attachments; being an earnest man, ardently interested in education, and sound rather than brilliant, though always popular.

In the spring of 1827, the "Old Tunnel" meeting house was taken down, and reërected, with changed form and a steeple, on the southerly corner of South Common and Commercial streets. The new building was dedicated Oct. 17, 1827.

Mr. Rockwood was dismissed May 12, 1832.

The next minister was Rev. David Peabody, who was ordained Nov. 15, 1832; and dismissed April 22, 1835.

Mr. Peabody was succeeded by Rev. Parsons Cooke, who was born in Hadley, Mass., Feb. 18, 1800, being son of Solomon Cooke, a farmer. He graduated at Williams college in 1822; and subsequently received the degree of D. D. He was installed over the East Evangelical church at Ware in June, 1826, and remained there till April, 1835, when he accepted a call to Portsmouth, N. H., where he stayed six months. He then came to Lynn, and was installed May 4, 1836.

After Mr. Cooke's installation, the society at once began a new house of worship on the eastern corner of Vine and South Common streets, where their present church stands. The new church was dedicated

Feb. 1, 1837. The old one was sold to the Second Universalist society, who have occupied it as a church ever since.

Dr. Cooke was a high Calvinist and loved controversy; was a man of quick perceptions and good reasoning powers, and rapidly arrived at conclusions, which he held tenaciously, and not always with gentleness toward those who differed from him. He had an abundance of natural wit, which often became sarcastic. He wrote "A Century of Puritanism and a Century of its Opposite," and other books; and for twenty years was editor of "The Puritan," a religious and secular newspaper, published first in Lynn, and subsequently in Boston. His literary style was that known as "elegant;" his sentences being terse and concise. He was tall and symmetrical in form. His appearance in the pulpit was dignified; and his delivery rapid, in a high tone, and with little intonation. He was industrious and faithful, though he did little parish work. His sedentary habits occasioned a long and painful illness, of which he died, in Lynn, Feb. 12, 1864, at the age of sixty-three. His ministry was successful; and his parishioners were strongly attached to him. His portrait here presented was made from a photograph taken about three years before his death. In the sorrow of his widow, consequent upon his death, she wrote the well-known hymn, entitled, "The Lord will provide."

"In some way or other,
The Lord will provide;
It may not be my way
It may not be thy way
And yet, in his own way
The Lord will provide."

During Dr. Cooke's last sickness and the year following his death the pulpit was supplied by Rev. George E. Allen.

The next settled pastor was Rev. James M. Whiton, who was ordained May 10, 1865. He was dismissed April 13, 1869, and subsequently became pastor of the North church.

Then the pulpit was supplied by Rev. Joseph Cook, the pungent and famous lecturer, in 1870 and 1871; and by Rev. J. R. Danforth in 1872.

PRESENT CHURCH EDIFICE.

On Christmas day 1870, the church was burned, and the present edifice was erected, being dedicated Aug. 29, 1872.

The next settled minister was Rev. Stephen R. Dennen, who was installed Nov. 13, 1872. He was dismissed March 29, 1875.

His successor, Rev. Walter Barton, was installed Feb. 24, 1876, and dismissed Feb. 19, 1884, removing to Attleboro'.

The next pastor was Rev. Frank J. Mundy, who was installed Dec. 4, 1884, and dismissed April 2, 1889.

His successor was Rev. James B. Dunn, who served from Sept. 1, 1889, to July 24, 1892.

The next pastor was Rev. John Olaf Haarvig, who was installed Oct. 24, 1893, and dismissed in 1895.

His successor is the present pastor, Rev. William C. Merrill, who entered upon his work here March 22, 1896.

OUR FATHERS' WILLS.

Our fathers in the olden time
 Once in a lifetime made
 Their wishes manifest by wills,
 Thorough and strong and staid.

They acknowledged faith in Christ
 And hope to rise again,
 Requesting Christian burial,
 Decent, proper and plain.

Then fixed the widow's support
 Till she remarried be,
 Appointed the lands to sons
 And men to oversee.

 NOTE.

“The D. Postmaster-General has appointed Mr. EDWARD NORRIS to be D. Postmaster for this Town. He has removed the Office from School-Street, where it was lately kept, to his House in the main Street, opposite the House of Francis Cabot, Esq.”—Essex Gazette (Salem), Oct. 11, 1768.

THE MYSTERIOUS LAND.

To this land unknown came men of old
 From their homes across the sea,
 Remembering well the stories told
 Of wonders found here to be.

Strange sights in the heavens filled them with dread,
 Strange noises were heard with alarm,
 And great fear came when the darkness spread
 At the midday's light and calm.

With terror they felt the sudden shock
 Of the earthquake's mighty force,
 Causing the very ledges of rock
 To tremble along its course.

But they stayed in the place they were cast,
 Steadily, bravely and true,
 Till the terrors were things of the past
 As knowledge and learning grew.

THE EARTHQUAKE OF 1638.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

Earthquakes are always fearful and impressive, but at the time this one occurred the people were possessed of many fears. They were not only superstitious, but this was a new and unknown world, which but a few years before was said to be associated with the most awful terrors.

Friday, June 1, 1638, was a very clear and beautiful day, with a gentle wind from the west. After the settlers had eaten their noon meal, they proceeded to their various labors in the field. Before two o'clock acute ears heard a faint murmur of distant sound, which became louder and clearer until every one heard that which seemed to be the far-a-way rumble of thunder. In a minute or two it increased in volume and sharpness until it resembled the rattling of many carriages fiercely driven over granite pavements. The people were alarmed, and discontinued their labors to discover the source and nature of the sound. Above, the sky was perfectly clear. They became perplexed. Not many moments elapsed, however, before the earth began to tremble, and terrified they threw down their tools and ran reeling like drunken men, with blanched countenances, to the first group of people they could find, for men like animals will flock together when they are afraid. The shaking continued to such an extent that people had to secure some permanent support in order to stand erect.

Not only the mainland, but the islands along the coast were shaken violently, and the vessels that rode in the harbors and those sailing without were jostled as though a series of tidal waves had passed under them.

People in the houses were greatly alarmed, for they not only heard the awful sound but felt the trembling of the earth. The houses over them shook to their foundations, and it seemed as if they must collapse. The chimneys, being imperfectly built on the outside of the house, of rough and uneven stones, without mortar, except for filling the chinks, readily yielded to the general shaking, and the tops of many of them fell off, striking on the house or on the ground. The noise of the falling stones without and the rattle of pewter platters and dishes upon the shelves within seemed the precursor of danger.

This first and greatest shock of the earthquake continued about four minutes; and shook the larger portion of New England.

The first shock died away and the noise ceased. The people resumed their labors. Half an hour passed, when to their surprise and terror, the horrible rumbling and quaking were renewed. But it quickly passed, being less violent than the first shock. For twenty days the earth remained in an unquiet condition.

At Newbury, a town meeting was being held, and during the discussions the sound of the on-coming earthquake burst upon their ears like "a shrill clap of thunder." The building was violently shaken; and amazement and fear filled the minds and hearts of the people. After the tumult it had caused had ceased, before proceeding, the assembly voted to make a record of the fact of the earthquake, concluding it, "wherefore taking notice of so great and strange a hand of God's providence, we were desirous of leaving it on record to the view of after ages to the intent that all might take notice of Almighty God and fear his name."

The summers for several years after the earthquake were too cool for the sufficient ripening of corn and other crops, as compared with those of a number of years preceding it. They were subject to unseasonable frosts, and on this account but little of the Indian corn matured. What connection this fact had with the earthquake, if any, is unknown.

This, the greatest earthquake of the seventeenth century, marked an epoch in the lives of the settlers, and for many years afterward it was common for them to compute dates as "so long since the earthquake."

THE ABRAHAM FAMILY.

The surname of Abraham is also spelled Abrahams.

WOODWARD ABRAHAM,¹ born about 1727, was living in Marblehead as early as 1753. He kept a shop, and was called a merchant in 1755, 1763, 1772 and 1779; and gentlemen in 1769, 1785 and 1786. He was one of the Salem custom-house officers, being commissioned Sept. 26, 1762; was an attendant at the services of St. Michael's church in Marblehead, having bought a pew in it in 1774; was at one period in the Revolutionary era regarded as unfriendly to the American cause, but was proven to be loyal thereto. He performed services in the army in the early part of the Revolution, when he was called of Salem; and afterward was for a long time postmaster of Marblehead, dying in office, Nov. 17, 1813, at the age of eighty-six.

He married Tabitha, daughter of Joseph Smethurst, a merchant of Marblehead, Nov. 28, 1751. She was living in 1788. Their children were born in Marblehead, as follows:—

- 2—I. TABITHA,² b. July 11, 1753.

- 12—XI. BETSEY,² b. Sept. 21, 1775.

THE ABRAM FAMILY.

The surname of Abram is also spelled Abrams and Abrims.

JOHN ABRAMS,¹ with his wife Mary, first appear in Amesbury in 1766. He is supposed to have been a Jew, from Palestine. It is said that he had a brother William, with whom he came from Palestine to New England at an unknown date, and that William fell into the sea and was drowned. John moved from Amesbury to Salisbury in 1771, and after 1775 probably settled in Sanbornton, N. H.

The children of John and Mary were as follows:—

- 2—I. JOHN,² b. May 3, 1766, in Amesbury; m. Mehitable, daughter of Laban and Mehitable (Putnam) Harriman, and niece of Gen. Israel Putnam; and settled in Sanbornton. He d. Aug. 29, 1841; and his wife d. July 26, 1844, aged eighty-two. They had four children.

NOTE.

On the back of a copy of the inventory of the estate of John Abbey, s'r, of Wenham, taken in 1703, and on file in the probate office at Salem, is written the following: "Lydia, dau. of Caleb & Mary ffoster 14 May 1703; David son to W^m. & Mary Goodle born 26 Apr. 1703."

COLONIAL HANDWRITING.

BY CHARLES KNOWLES BOLTON.

To copy a manuscript letter for letter, is, in the minds of some, the mark of pedantry; to modernize it is, in the estimation of others, the source of all inaccuracy.

Whether we copy letter for letter or give the words as they should be we should at least know just what was intended by each character in the manuscript before copying. Thus this word:

should be recognized as "desesed" before it becomes "deceased."

Some of the early handwriting shows a lack of training which is to be expected in an agricultural community like that in the New England of the seventeenth century. The callous hand was not always under control. A quaintness, too, was given to the page by the spelling which at best allowed some liberty to follow one's taste, originality, and manner of pronunciation. A man who spelled "son" with a double "o" would now be writing his own death warrant.

But there were certain forms characteristic of the writing of our emigrant ancestors which were due neither to paper, pen nor lack of training. These are after all few, but they appear with sufficient frequency to puzzle one unfamiliar with the subject. They may be traced in part to the teaching of the schoolmaster and in part to the influence of the printed forms of letters.

"A" and "B" have changed little since the days of Pericles.

Capital "C," in many cases looks like a copy-book "O," in which the returning stroke, instead of meeting the point of starting runs down inside the downward stroke. The whole is crossed by a horizontal line. Sometimes it is an "O" open at the top and crowned with a cup or semicircle. The small "c" is usually much like the small printed "r"—a downward heavy stroke with a horizontal line at the top.

The small "d" usually has a loop above instead of a downward final stroke.

Capital "E" is commendably individual. In officially prepared documents it is the common capital "C" with a small "z" just inside the downward stroke, or, as in the signature of Jacob Eliot, brother of the apostle, the "z" crossed back and forth over the downward stroke of the "C." It is so written by Madit Engs of Boston, whose peculiar name is among those of the early settlers.

The small "e" is an imperfect "c" surmounted by a dash or cup. In ordinary writing it became an "o" with the last stroke looped at the top. This form is frequently misleading. Often, however, the loop comes above the starting point of the letter, which then looks like one form of the Greek "th."

The double "ff" was used occasionally, as in the surnames ffrench and ffarrington, but hardly more often in the seventeenth century than as an affectation in the nineteenth.

Capital "G" is usually very intelligible. A curious form, however, is that of a backward inclining capital "C" with the last stroke running down into a loop across the center of the "C," and returning to form a smaller loop some distance above the character. The small "g" is often a "y" crossed at the top or mouth.

Capital "H" is often simple. One form appears as a written "S" (looped at the top) with an inverted cap below and a tail starting at its right and running downward. The small "h" is a very curious transformation of a simple letter. The main part of the letter decreases to little or nothing, while the final downward stroke becomes a large loop. Both this form and the present "h" appear in the same signature as written by John Winthrop, governor of Connecticut. The old "h" was a common form and with the his

the "e" does much to confuse early writing. In the, his, and this, "h" is particularly capricious.

"I" and "J," both capital and small letter, are often made alike.

Small "k" looks like a long old-fashioned "f" attacked by a "z."

The downward stroke of the large "L" twists to the right more than is now thought necessary.

Capitals "M" and "N" take various grotesque shapes, in imitation of the printed letters.

Capital "O," as written by the Olivers and others, has parallel perpendicular lines across it. Small "o" is often disconnected, to distinguish it, perhaps, from the "e" which, when looped at the top, is very similar.

Capital "P" is a heavy downward stroke, crossed by a line which forms a small loop at the right, and runs up to form a semicircle or inverted cups opposite the head of the initial stroke. Small "p" is an "x" where the first and second strokes join, the second stroke extending downward diagonally toward the left.

Capital "R" is frequently a "P" crossed at the centre. Small "r" is sometimes the German written "r"—a downward stroke, a stroke to the right ending in a loop which ends in an upward stroke,—and sometimes the ordinary forms.

"S," for capitals as well as for small letters, is a downward stroke retraced.

It is also the final Greek "S"—a circle ending in an upward stroke.

Small "u" (or "v") is very often a diagonal upward stroke with a small cup at the end. When combined with other letters it nearly disappears.

u v

The remaining letters of the alphabet are fairly simple.

w x t

In the combinations of letters some difficulties arise, but by trying the forms here described most words will be easily deciphered. Below are given copies of a few words and combined letters, as specimens of early writing.

THE ANCIENT PUTNAM SIDEBOARD.

The frontispiece of this number of the Antiquarian is an engraving of the ancient Putnam sideboard, which is believed to be nearly if not quite three hundred years old. It is now in the possession of the Essex Institute at Salem, having been placed there by Miss Harriet P. Fowler, of Danvers, who is a member of the Putnam family. It is an elaborate piece of furniture, made of the dark English oak, and shows every sign of its antiquity. No nails were driven in its construction, wooden pegs being used instead.

ANSWERS.

35. Genealogical information concerning the Pottle family can be found in the records of Hampton and Stratham, in New Hampshire, and of Newbury and Salisbury, in Massachusetts.—Ed.

81. Sarah⁴, wife of John Wilder, jr., was not Sarah Sawyer, but Sarah, daughter of Josiah³ and Mary (Rice) White, born in Lancaster Oct. 21, 1680. They were married about 1699. John White¹ and wife Joanna came from the west of England to Salem, Mass., in 1638, and settled in that part of the town which is now Wenham. His wife Joanna died in Lancaster 18:4:1654; and his will was made in 1673. Their youngest son, Josiah White,² baptized in Salem June 4, 1643, removed with his parents to Lancaster in 1653, and married, first, Mary Lewis, who had no children. He married, second, Nov. 28, 1678, Mary Rice, of Marlborough, daughter of Thomas and Mary Rice, who was born in Sudbury Sept. 4, 1656. Her father, Thomas Rice, died in Sudbury, his will being proved in 1681 and her mother's in 1715. Thomas Rice was son of Edmund and Tamerzine Rice, who came from England. I prove Sarah (White) Wilder's parentage by an agreement made by John Wilder and his wife and her sisters May 13, 1719, and recorded in Middlesex county records, volume 20, page 486.—Myra L. White, Haverhill.

82. Prudence Keyes was daughter of James and Hannah (Divoll) Keyes. Her father was son of Elias and Sarah (Blanchard) Keyes of Marlborough. Prudence married, July 7, 1725, in Lancaster. I find her name, Prudence Wilder, in her father's will. Hannah Divoll was daughter of Ens. John and Hannah (White) Divoll, and was born in Lancaster June 12, 1667. She was taken prisoner by the Indians with her mother and youngest brother, William, at the Rowlandson garrison house in Lancaster Feb. 10, 1675-6, and her father and older brothers died in captivity or were killed. Hannah (White) Divoll was daughter of John and Joanna White, and sister of Mrs. Mary Rowlandson, wife of the first minister of Lancaster.—M. L. White, Haverhill.

83. Lydia Rugg was a descendant from John¹ and Hannah Rugg of Concord. Their son, Daniel Rugg,² was born in Concord 15:9:1678, and married Elizabeth Priest in 1704. They had a son, Reuben Rugg,³ who was baptized in Lancaster Aug. 26, 1716 (being probably about eleven years old). He married Lydia Ross of Lancaster March 10, 1730-1, and they became the parents of Lydia Rugg, who was born in Lancaster March 23, 1732-3; and married Asa Wilder Dec. 12, 1754.—*M. L. METHODS OF HEATING IN THE OLDEN TIME.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

THE first settlers of Essex county found here a climate even colder and more rigorous than that of their old home. In the construction of their habitations arrangements had to be made for heating the living room, at least, and also for purposes of cookery. They were compelled to resort to the quickest and readiest, and, in many instances, the cheapest method of its accomplishment. In the mother land open fireplaces supplied all these needs. These could readily be made by piling stones at the end of the house, wall fashion, in the form of three sides of a square, opening into the house. When a height of about six feet was reached, a hewn timber was laid across the ends, the front being utilized for a mantle-piece and the rest for the support of the front part of the chimney, which was then carried up on all sides as high as the house, being made somewhat smaller at the top, thus forming a large flue. The construction was made as tight as possible, though chinks soon appeared in the earliest chimneys. The later ones were better constructed.

The hearth was also built of stone and extended not only over the fireplace but several feet into the room. Into the fireplace the long heavy logs were piled, being raised a few inches above the hearth, for the purpose of draught, by fire-dogs, and later by andirons. Those early scenes indeed bring to mind the ancient Yule logs of merry England.

But these logs had just been felled, and being perfectly unseasoned could not be readily kindled. Dead boughs of pine and other trees were gathered and piled beneath the logs. Then the jack-knife of our fathers was used to make shavings from the dry sticks with which to kindle them. And then the flint and steel and tinder-box must be patiently used until the shavings were on fire. Once kindled, the fire was rarely allowed to become extinct in the winter season, being constantly supplied with logs, or continued by living coals of peat buried in the ashes.

Though the fire was usually a hot one, most of the heat passed up the chimney, and in cold frosty nights the flames sometimes rose above the chimney top, endangering the safety of the dwelling. In the large living rooms of our ancestors the hearth-fire did not comfortably warm the entire space; so settles with high tight board backs,* some five feet in height and several feet in length, were placed in front and on either side of the fireplace, that back and face might be equally warm. And the light from the flames was generally so bright that no candles were required for the ordinary work of the household.

This hearth-fire was not only used for heating, but for cooking, by placing the food to be cooked on the hearth in front of the fire, or in the great kettle that hung over it ; or, later, when better chimneys were built with baking ovens in them, the food was placed in the oven and slowly and deliciously cooked, to the enjoyment of the family on Sunday morning, unless the door of the oven was outside of the house, and some lover of a good breakfast purloined its contents, leaving the family without their customary Indian pudding, brown bread and beans.

If persons were working in a corner of the room far from the fire-place, they would heat stones and keep their feet upon them while they worked. In later years an improvement was made in the use of portable heat. A tin box was placed within a wooden frame, which was sometimes square and sometimes round or oblong, and within the box, which was more or less perforated at the sides and top, live coals from the hearth-fire were placed on ashes. The coals kept alive for several hours. These foot stoves, as they were called, were very comfortable.

FOOT STOVE.

In some early meeting-houses, fire-places were built in one corner, as, for instance, in the first church in Salem. Foot stoves were also carried to meeting in later times, and they lessened the coldness of the place. In many towns a small house was erected near the meeting-house, having a fireplace and a chimney in it, and in such houses the people comfortably passed the intermission between services. Here, also, the foot stoves could be replenished with coals from the hearth-fire.

In 1745, the inventive mind of Benjamin Franklin added another star to his famous constellation by the Franklin stove, which is still in use, though somewhat changed. It was made of cast-iron as now, and was in its appearance a modified fire-place. It varied principally from the modern stove of that name in having an open space at its back, which is still deemed by many to be an advantage. Toward the close of the last century the Franklin stove, of the style shown in the following engraving, was in common use in Essex county.

THE EARLY FRANKLIN STOVE.

In 1796, Dea. Eleazer Spofford of Jaffrey, N. H., invented a novel stove made of brick. Deacon Spofford was born in what is now Georgetown, on Spofford's hill, Aug. 12, 1739. He moved to Jaffrey in 1778 and built some valuable mills on the Contoocook river, being an ingenious mechanic. Late in life, he removed to the East parish of Bradford, now Groveland, Mass., where he died in 1828.

The Salem Gazette of Feb. 2, 1796, contained a description of this stove. Captain Saunderson of Salem read the article, and thought he would have one built. He engaged Capt. John Dodge, a brick mason, to construct one. The principles upon which it was made were similar to the Franklin iron stove. It was found that brick retained heat better than iron, thus making the temperature more equable and consuming less fuel. It was so successful in its use that Mr. Dodge was employed to build several others in the fall of that year, as well as in the next year.

A man by the name of Pollock made an improvement on the brick stove, and

Mr. Dodge added it to the stoves he was making, apparently without knowing of Mr. Pollock's patent. The following copy of an advertisement which Mr. Dodge inserted in the Salem Gazette of Dec. 18, 1810, shows that he and Mr. Pollock came to an agreement:—

PATENT STOVES.

THE Subscriber last winter invented a BRICK STOVE for the purpose of warming dwelling-houses, churches, counting rooms, &c. which proved very beneficial for that purpose; but finding that it participated of the principle of Mr. Pollock's patent, he has obtained authority of that Patentee to continue to erect the same, and has invented a new-constructed and durable air vessel, which will give full effect to the principle, by which rooms may be warmed at a reduced expence of fuel, and a great increase of comfort. He will now erect said Stoves, with the improved air vessel, for any who may wish, or empower others to set them up. Air Vessels, Doors, &c. may be had of Newhall & Lewis, tin-plate workers, near the Salem Hotel.

Salem, Dec. 18.

JOHN DODGE.

This kind of a stove was soon supplanted by a brick stove that was in use in Russia and had been for two centuries. Capt. Solomon Towne,* of Salem, commander of the ship Galatea, spent the winter of 1810-11 in Russia, where he, with other Americans, were attracted by the efficiency of the brick stoves in use there. With much difficulty he found a person who could make him a model. This was an ingenious German potter, residing near Revel (the port where Captain Towne's vessel lay), who made tiles for stoves. At considerable expense to Captain Towne, the German made him two neat porcelain models, one square and the other circular. Captain Towne sailed from Revel to St. Petersburg, and mentioned the matter of the models to John Quincy Adams,† the American ambassador, who expressed great pleasure at his success, observing that he had himself been desirous of obtaining a model to send home, but had never been able to do so. The directions accompanying

*He was born in Boxford.

†He studied law in Newburyport.

the models being in the German language, Mr. Adams furnished Captain Towne with an English translation of them.

On Captain Towne's return to Salem, he exhibited the models to Mr. Dodge, who was eager to seize on any improvement. With Captain Towne's consent, Mr. Dodge erected one in his own house, which proved satisfactory.

The principle of the stove was that the heat should pass through various compartments, so as to heat a large surface of brick in a small space. The directions for using the stove stated that "the wood should be light and dry, so as quickly to burn down to a coal, when, all the smoke having passed off, the damper is immediately closed, by which means the heat is retained." It saved one-half of the fuel that was needed for the old manner of heating, and diffused a moderate and uniform heat. The stove could be constructed in various shapes, and was susceptible of a neat appearance.

Great Saving of Fuel, and Promotion of Warmth and Comfort.

and, in order to ascertain its merits, set one up in his own house, has found by experiment that he can warm a common room for 24 hours with ten sticks of wood, each 3 inches diameter and 2 feet long, keeping the room at about 60 degrees of Fahrenheit's thermometer on an average for the 24 hours. The Russian stove would be excellent for large public rooms, and especially for meeting-houses, by which three-fourths of the fuel commonly used may be saved; and, being of brick, the expense is not great. The Stove he has constructed may be seen in operation at his house in Barton Square; and he will attend to any calls for putting up Stoves of this or his own construction.

Salem, Jan. 7, 1812.

JOHN DODGE.

This was the only Russian stove that Captain Dodge ever made. He had nearly completed one for the office of Hon. Samuel Putnam, and was finishing it when he was seized with a pain in his breast. He sat down in a chair, and instantly expired without a groan. This was on January 13th, and he was forty-five years of age.

In the Salem Gazette of Jan. 21, 1812, the following advertisement may be found:—

Russian Stoves.

THE subscriber, who was an apprentice to the late Capt. John Dodge, proposes to continue to work for the family at his trade. He offers to construct RUSSIAN STOVES for any persons who may apply. He assisted Mr. Dodge in building that for S. Putnam Esq. in his office—which has exceeded the most sanguine expectations. He will be assisted by Mr. William Roberts.

Apply to ALLEN MARSH,
At Capt. Dodge's late dwelling.

N. B.—The Stoves will be built after the model that Mr. Dodge had procured.

An ornamental stove of this kind was built in the Essex Bank, two in the then new South meeting-house, and others in private dwellings within the next two weeks, all of which fulfilled the highest expectations.

In the Salem Gazette of March 17, 1812, the following advertisement appeared:—

To the Public.

THE saving of fuel, and at the same time the promoting of warmth and comfort, has long been a desirable attainment in this country; and much time has been spent, and great expense incurred upon this object. Many new methods have been invented, and patent rights secured; but all have fallen short of the purpose, until the

was introduced by Capt. SOLOMON TOWNE, who with much difficulty and at great expense obtained a correct model of it, with directions for erecting and using it. From this model from 20 to 30 Stoves have already been erected, the experience of which have proved it to be superior to anything of the kind ever offered to the public, whether for the saving of fuel, or introducing a pleasant warmth into the room, free from the disagreeable air which generally arises from stoves hitherto in use. The experience of the country from whence it comes, for 200 years, affords the most ample proof of its utility in tempering the severity of winter. This Stove may be built at a small expense, and at the same time be made as handsome as any piece of furniture whatever, and it may be so placed as to warm several rooms with the same fire. The Subscribers having purchased of Capt. Towne the model of this Stove, with the directions for building and using it, they are now ready to attend to any calls upon them from any place, either to erect Stoves, or to sell the model, &c. upon reasonable terms. *

Salem, March 17, 1812.

RUSSIAN STOVE.

THE public are respectfully informed that the Subscribers have purchased with others the model of the RUSSIAN STOVE, introduced by Capt. SOLOMON TOWNE. The real utility of this Stove has been completely proved by experiment. Independent of the fact that in Russia it is in ordinary use among all classes of persons—it has been here subject to repeated trials, and under all the disadvantages attending first experiments, has obtained universal success and approbation. It saves more than one half of the ordinary consumption of fuel; diffuses a moderate, uniform and agreeable heat, and is perfectly safe from accident. Care however must be taken in the construction, otherwise the beneficial effects will be impaired. The Stove admits of a variety of forms, and is not only susceptible of neatness, but even of elegance, and can be accommodated to every shape of room. The subscribers have the full benefit of the Russian model and directions, and are ready to warrant that Stoves erected by them shall equal any which can be constructed. The Subscribers are also authorized to sell models, &c. to any persons who wish to engage in this business.

Salem, April 28, 1812.

In spite of the transfer of the interest of the family of Captain Dodge in this new stove, Allen Marsh, who assisted him in the erection of the first one, published in the Salem Gazette of July 21, 1812, a notice addressed to "his friends and the public of this and the neighboring towns, that he continues to erect the Russian stove according to the real earthen model brought from Russia." He further said that it could be ornamented with marble or freestone; and that orders would be received at his lodgings, directly opposite Tay's sadler's shop near North bridge.

Early in this century iron fire-frames, as they were called, being a sort of fire-place with sides and top, but no back or front, were in use in some houses. They were made to be set against the chimney so that the chimney would form the back of the frame, an aperture being in the chimney at the upper part of the frame. It stood on a hearth of brick, on which the fire was built, the wood being raised above the hearth by andirons. The fire-place, thus formed, was used as such. These fire-frames were often quite ornamental; and may yet be seen in old houses in Essex county.

A FIRE-FRAME.

Immediately after this time the idea of making the stoves of iron became prevalent, and soon manifested itself by the manufacture of stoves made of both sheet and cast iron. The following are some of the earliest styles of iron stoves that the writer has found, with the exception, of course, of the Franklin stove. These stoves were probably made in Philadelphia, perhaps by the company manufacturing the Franklin stove. These stoves were in use as early as 1819. They were connected with the chimney by funnel, as modern stoves are. These crude engravings are reproductions from newspaper advertisements of the date mentioned.

The following are similar engravings of stoves that were in use in 1826. Some of them were made for use in shops and others in school houses.

These methods of heating seem very crude and impartial when compared with modern steam, hot air, hot water, gas, oil and electric heating, but each of them was a step toward the present systems.

" OLD IRONSIDES. "

Ay, tear her tattered ensign down!
 Long has it waved on high,
 And many an eye has danced to see
 That banner in the sky;
 Beneath it rung the battle shout,
 And burst the cannon's roar;—
 The meteor of the ocean air Shall sweep the clouds no more!

Her deck, once red with heroes' blood,
 Where knelt the vanquished foe,
 When winds were hurrying o'er the flood
 And waves were white below,
 No more shall feel the victor's tread,
 Or know the conquered knee;—
 The harpies of the shore shall pluck
 The eagle of the sea!

O. W. Holmes.

THE FRIGATE CONSTITUTION.

The centennial anniversary of the launching of the old United States frigate Constitution has just been celebrated in Boston, the gallant ship having been repaired and put in order for formal service.

Some of the original timbers were cut in the woods in that part of Rowley which is now Georgetown, and teamed, by the Brocklebanks and Nelsons, to Charlestown navy-yard, where the ship was launched Oct. 21, 1797.

Its crew was made up of men from this part of the state, eighty of whom were from Marblehead.

She carried forty-four guns; and came to be affectionately called "Old Ironsides."

Her first active service was in the maritime troubles before Tripoli in 1804; and she served all through the war of 1812-15, being always fortunate, probably from the fact that she was well commanded and manned. In the war of 1812-15, Capt. Isaac Hull had her in command until toward the end of the year 1812, when he transferred her to Commodore Bainbridge.

Aug. 19, 1812, she engaged the Guerriere, a thirty-eight-gun ship under the command of Captain Dacres. The English vessel finally surrendered, after being so badly injured that she was set on fire and abandoned. The Guerriere lost one hundred and one men killed, wounded and missing. The Constitution had seven killed and seven wounded. Up to this time, the British navy had had a charm of invincibility upon the sea, which was now broken, and the dismay in England was only paralleled by the joy in America. The enthusiasm in Marblehead upon the result of this engagement was unbounded.

Dec. 29, 1812, she so successfully encountered the British frigate Java, of thirty-eight guns, off San Salvador, in the West Indies, that after a desperate action of three hours' duration the Java was reduced to a complete wreck, not a spar being left standing. Her commander and one hundred and sixty of her crew were either killed or wounded. The Constitution was slightly injured, and but thirty-four of her men were killed or wounded. Among the killed were the two sons of a poor widow, named Cheever, of Marblehead.

The Constitution came north to be repaired, and again recourse was had to old Baldpate, in Georgetown, for the timber, out of which its new knees, planks and stanchions were formed. The timber was hauled to Charlestown by Capt. Eliphalet Chaplin.

On Sunday forenoon, April 3, 1814, the people of Marblehead were alarmed by the sudden appearance of three great ships of war sailing as fast as wind could carry them with their prows pointed toward the harbor. The ship in advance was recognized as the Constitution, the two in the rear being the English frigates Tenedos and Endymion. The Constitution was escaping from her pursuers, and with the assistance of the seamen, who knew every rock and shoal of the locality, she sailed swiftly and majestically into the harbor, as cheer followed cheer from the crowded headlands and housetops. The British commanders had no such assistants and they dared not come very near the rocky coast. At about five o'clock, she weighed anchor, and sailed into Salem harbor, where she was more protected. The Constitution was commanded at this time by Captain Stewart.

To protect the frigate and the town a number of heavy cannon were sent from Salem, and the Marblehead artillery assembled, but no further sally of the British was made.

She was in active service all through the war, and was never dismasted or stranded. She was in three actions, and was twice closely chased. She captured five vessels of war, two of which were frigates, and a third frigate-built.

At the breaking out of the Rebellion, in April, 1861, the Constitution was stationed, as a school ship, off Annapolis, Md., and it was feared that the Confederates would seize her. On their way to Washington, by water, the Salem Zouaves and the "sappers and miners" corps of the Eighth regiment discovered her imminent danger and they went aboard and by lightening her got her over the bar and out to sea, sailing her to New York. Many of these men were sailors, and belonged in Georgetown, Gloucester, Lynn, Marblehead, Newburyport, and Salem. The old frigate was saved just in time from being transformed into a rebel ram.

ANSWERS.

37. Noah West married Abigail Blay, both of Newbury, Oct. 16, 1745. On the record of births in Newbury is recorded: "William Blay, son of Noah Blay and Abigail his wife, born January 21, 1746" (probably 1746-7). This William Blay is undoubtedly William Blay West, son of Noah West and Abigail Blay. Not being accustomed to writing middle names the town clerk wrote, inadvertantly probably, as the father's name, Blay instead of West. This is probably the William Blay West who lived in New Gloucester, Me.—Ed.

87. May 8, 1648, James Smith bought a large tract of land in Woolwich, Me., of Robin Hood, the Indian chief. He died in Woolwich about 1660. His widow Elizabeth married again, and in an Indian raid, in August, 1676, this second husband was killed, together with her son Samuel Smith, and the rest of the family were made prisoners. When liberated, two of the sons, James and Hazadiah, fled to Massachusetts, James settling in Salem Village and Hazadiah in Beverly. Hazadiah married Hannah Grover in 1684. She died in 1751. Hazadiah is said to have been one of the early settlers of Falmouth, now Portland, Me., and that he came to Beverly in 1690.—Mary A. Parsons, Lynnfield Centre.

[Hazadiah Smith was born about 1657. His mother's second husband was Richard Hammond, who was killed by the Indians in 1676; and she married again, to Capt. John Rawdon of the Sagadahoc militia. Hazadiah married Hannah, daughter of John and Sarah (Barney) Grover May 27, 1684.—Ed.

EDITORIAL.

This number completes volume one of THE ESSEX ANTIQUARIAN. There have been published the wills proved in Essex county before 1644; the gravestone inscriptions in the present town of Amesbury before 1800; the genealogies of families from Abbe to Acie, inclusive; the record of the Essex county Revolutionary soldiers and sailors from Abaaham to Andrews; and abstracts of the old Norfolk county records to 1655. The publishers are gratified at the support given them in their endeavor to present a magazine of Essex county history and genealogy with some degree of completeness. They expect that the new year will produce even better results.

The Essex Antiquarian.

ESSEX COUNTY is the most historic county in America, and hundreds of towns and cities in various sections of the United States and British Provinces have been founded by its emigrants. Its settlement began in 1623, and all the towns and cities were settled in that century. The county comprises Amesbury, Andover, Beverly, Boxford, Bradford, Byfield, Danvers, Essex, Georgetown, Gloucester, Groveland, Hamilton, Haverhill, Ipswich, Lawrence, Lynn, Lynnfield, Manchester, Marblehead, Merrimac, Methuen, Middleton, Nahant, Newbury, Newburyport, North Andover, Peabody, Rockport, Rowley, Salem, Salisbury, Saugus, Swampscott, Topsfield, Wenham and West Newbury.

The object of this magazine is to preserve the history and genealogy of the county and to render accessible records which are unindexed and in private custody. The records include admissions to and dismissions from the churches, baptisms, births, marriages, deaths, intentions of marriages, gravestone inscriptions, old newspaper news-items, advertisements and obituary notices, parish records and tax lists, town-meeting records and tax lists, probate records and original wills and other papers on file, deeds, civil and criminal court records, proprietors' records, colonial, provincial and state records, Revolutionary and other soldiers' muster rolls, etc., Bible records, account books, old letters, commissions, interleaved almanacs, diaries, journals, etc. Seven-eighths of the public records are not indexed, and none of them have complete indexes of names. A vast amount of hidden historical and genealogical material is thus brought into ready use.

The literary portion consists of biographies, genealogies, sketches of local history, churches and old homesteads, of early commerce, education and industries, ancient customs, etc.

The illustrations consist of houses, churches, maps, portraits, autographs, coats-of-arms, gravestones, ancient furniture, articles of domestic use, apparel, seals, etc.

The complete genealogies of the county are being published in full and in alphabetical order down to the year 1800. This forms a complete genealogical dictionary of the county, and includes the Ipswich Hammatt Papers, the Essex county portion of Savage's Genealogical Dictionary, the probate records and original papers on file, the records of deeds, etc., court records, births, marriages, intentions of marriages, and deaths from town records, baptisms, etc., from church records, gravestone inscriptions, private records, etc. This is a great and much needed work, and would be impossible but for the extensive collections of the editor made during many years from original records, with this end in view.

The early wills of the county are also being printed in full, verbatim et literatim, in the order of their probate.

The full official record of the service of the Essex county soldiers and sailors of the Revolution is also appearing in alphabetical order.

The records of old Norfolk county, which existed from 1643 to 1679, and included all towns north of the Merrimac river at that period, are being published. The records consist of births, marriages, deaths, deeds, wills, inventories, etc., and have been almost inaccessible and their existence known but to few. The conveyances are of lands in the present towns of Atkinson, Brentwood, Danville, East Kingston, Epping, Exeter, Fremont, Hampstead, Hampton, Hampton Falls, Kensington, Kingston, Newmarket, Newton, North Hampton, Plaistow, Rye, Salem, Seabrook, South Hampton, and South Newmarket, in New Hampshire, and most of the towns north of Salem in Essex county, Massachusetts.

The gravestone inscriptions in the county bearing dates prior to 1800 are also being printed, as nearly as type can reproduce them.

THE AMES MURDER.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

ONE of the most interesting cases in criminal proceedings that ever occurred in Essex county is that of the Ames murder in the West parish of Boxford in the year 1769. The story of the murder and the trial of the accused is as follows.

On a knoll on the east side of a little brook running past the barn of Mr. A. S. Howe in Linebrook parish, Ipswich, and on the northerly side of the highway, are the remains of an ancient cellar. The house that stood there was probably gone before this century opened. A part of the cellar wall remains, and there yet survive some shrubs that grew in the yard. Here lived widow Ruth Perley with her family late in the year 1768. Her eldest child, Samuel, was then pastor of the church in Seabrook, N. H., and the rest of the six children were at home. Ruth, the elder daughter was twenty-one Oct. 29th. The family had lived there for many years.

Ruth was pretty and refined; and though her home was in the extreme western portion of the town of Ipswich, and in a sparsely settled region, she was early sought in marriage by Jonathan Ames of Boxford, a young man of affluent parents. They were married Dec. 19, 1768, by her brother, Rev. Samuel Perley.

Mr. Ames took his bride to the house of his parents in West Boxford, and lived there. The Ames house stood on the westerly side of the road running from "Captain Wood's corner" to the "peg factory," on a knoll by the edge of the present woods. The site is shown in the frontispiece, at its top, the bars being located in the cellar hole.

As has been the case in some instances since that early time, the mother-in-law was not in full sympathy with the young bride dwelling under her roof. The reason of this is probably as inexplicable as it has been in many similar cases.

Spring had hardly come when Mrs. Ames, senior, began to speak of Ruth as her son's housekeeper. Eventually, about the latter part of May a child was born to the newly-wedded couple.

On the morning of the fifth of June, one of the neighbors, Mrs. Kimball, called to see the young mother. She was met at the door by Mrs. Ames, senior, who, in reply to the request of Mrs. Kimball to see Ruth, objected, intimating that she was very ill, and had vomited and purged so much that it was disagreeable to enter the chamber. Notwithstanding, Mrs. Kimball entered the house and went into the sick chamber. She found that the room was clean and agreeable, and there appeared no signs of vomiting or purging. But Ruth was in deathly agony, with froth or phlegm exuding from her mouth. She was taken sick in that manner at about seven o'clock in the morning and died between eleven and twelve o'clock before noon. Mrs. Ames said she knew that Ruth would die as it was the same disorder that a certain Mrs. Chandler died with some years before, and that it "was as mortal as the plague;" and that there would be another death soon, having reference to the baby. On laying out the body, livid spots, indicating poison, appeared on one of the arms of the deceased.

The writer was informed many years ago by an aged lady, who was born and had always lived her almost centenary of years within a few rods of the Ames homestead, and personally knew many of the people who took a prominent part in the events that followed, that the funeral occurred soon after Ruth's death, that none of the neighbors were invited to it and that a clergyman from a neighboring town performed the burial service instead of Rev. John Cushing, pastor of the church, who was their nearest neighbor. The burial occurred in the old village cemetery, which is shown as it now appears in the middle section of the frontispiece.

Mrs. Kimball was suspicious that Ruth had been poisoned to death. She repeatedly told of what she had experienced at the Ames house and in the sick room. The peculiar attitude which Mrs. Ames assumed toward the deceased seemed to confirm the suspicion of poisoning, and that Mrs. Ames was at least cognizant of the crime. The matter of an accusation was not at first conceived, but about a month afterward the feeling against Mrs. Ames became so strong that a complaint signed by twenty-nine men, and consented to by the relatives of the deceased, was preferred to Henry Ingalls, Moses Dole and Abraham Choate, three coroners, for an inquisition upon the body, which had lain in the ground all that length of time.

The coroners thereupon summoned a jury of twenty-five (whose names are affixed to their report hereinafter given, Joseph Osgood being foreman), thirteen of whom were physicians; and four other physicians were engaged to perform the autopsy.

The inquest was opened on Monday, July 10th, "when there assembled a promiscuous multitude of people." The court was held in the meeting-house, which stood on the easterly side of the "Sandy road" in the pasture in the rear of the old cemetery, a road, which can still be traced running from the meeting-house up the present wooded declivity to the cemetery, and from thence as it now exists to the parsonage on the ancient Andover road. The site of the meeting-house, as it now appears, is shown in the frontispiece, at the bottom.

Rarely, if ever, has such a mass of people been seen in the parish, the meeting-house being, as the current newspaper* said, "much thronged."

The court was opened with prayer. The coroners then gave the jury "their solemn charge." During these exercises the same newspaper account says, "there appeared not the least irregularity or disorder, but a solemn, silent sadness seemed to be fixed on the face of the gayest youth."

After the charge, the coroners, the jury and the spectators proceeded "with decency and good order," over the winding roadway up the hill to the old burying-ground, where for five weeks had lain the body of the murdered girl.

The exhumation of the body was begun; and as it progressed the human mass surged around the grave so eagerly to see the whole of the operation that they were only kept from causing harm by being told that all should have an opportunity of seeing the remains.

The body was taken to the meeting-house, the procession taking up its route down the hill, at the middle of that mid-summer day.

An autopsy was made by the physicians; the jury heard their report and other testimony, and two days later the coroners and the jury made report of their inquisition as follows:—

When it was found that no sufficient evidence could be adduced to connect either the husband of the murdered girl, or his mother, with the murder, then was demanded an exhibition of that almost forgotten “ordeal of touch,” which has rarely been known in England in modern centuries, and, as the writer believes, never in New England, except in this instance.

The body being laid upon a table with a sheet over it, Jonathan and his mother were invited to prove their innocence by this gruesome test. The ancient practice was similar. The body was laid at length, covered only with a sheet of the purest white, in the dim and weird church, and the suspected party was invited to touch the neck of the deceased with the index-finger of the left hand, the superstition being that when the guilty hand touched the remains blood would issue, the whiteness of the sheet making it plainly visible, “pleading trumpet-tongued against the deep-damnation of her taking off.”

These scenes were always awful, being rendered more so by the environment and the nervous tension of every one of the multitude that gazed with strained eyes and breathless upon the accused as he dared to either advance toward or retreat from the remains, either direction tending to confirm his guilt in the minds of the spectators until he finally passed the ordeal, which but few persons ever did.

In this instance, from fear, probably, not that they believed in the superstition, but were afraid that by some chance blood might flow, both refused.

The “examination gave great occasion to conclude that they were concerned in the poisoning,” and on Tuesday, July 18, they were arrested and taken to Salem, where they were confined in the ancient jail where the persons accused of witchcraft were imprisoned many years before.

When the grand jury sat, Mrs. Ames was duly indicted as the principal, and Jonathan as accessory in the crime. Mrs. Ames' indictment was as follows:—

“The Jurors for the said Lord the King upon their Oath presented that Elizabeth Eams the wife of Jonathan Eams of Boxford in the said county of Essex yeoman, on the fourth day of June last past, at Boxford aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, not having the fear of God in her heart, but feloniously, wickedly and of her malice aforethought intending and contriving with Poison to kill and murder one Ruth Eams, then and there being in the peace of God, and of the said Lord the King, did then & there with force and arms feloniously willfully and of her malice aforethought, mix and mingle a great quantity of white arsenic, being a deadly poison, in a certain quantity of Spermaceti fhe the said Elizabeth Eams, then and there well knowing the said white arsenic to be a deadly poison; And that fhe the said Elizabeth Eams, there afterwards, to wit, on the same day, the poison aforesaid so mixed and mingled as aforesaid; with force and arms feloniously willfully and of her malice aforethought, did offer and give to her the said Ruth Eams, to take, eat and Swallow down; and that the s^d. Ruth Eams, not knowing the poison aforesaid, to have been mixed and mingled as aforesaid, in the Spermaceti aforesaid, there afterward on the same day, by the procurement and persuasion of the said Elizabeth Eams, did take, eat and swallow down the said Poison, so mixed and mingled as aforesaid; and thereupon the said Ruth Eams by the said poison, so, as aforesaid taken eaten & Swallowed down, then and there became sick and distempered in her body; and the said Ruth Eams of the poison aforesaid, and of the sickness and Distemper thereby occasioned, did languish and languishing did live from the said fourth day of June last, untill the fifth day of the same June, at Boxford aforesaid in the county aforesaid; on which same fifth day of June, at Boxford aforesaid in the county aforesaid, the said Ruth Eams died of the poison aforesaid and of the Sickness and distemper thereby occasioned as aforesaid; and so the Jurors aforesaid upon their ||said|| Oath do say that the said Elizabeth Eams, in manner and form and by the means aforesaid, feloniously, willfully and of her malice aforethought, did poison kill and murder the said Ruth Eams against the peace of the s^d. Lord the King his crown and dignity.

While lodged in jail, Mrs. Ames was heard to mutter in her sleep, “Don't tell on me, Jonathan; if you do, I shall be hanged.”

The superior court, in which the case would be tried, being about to sit in Salem, Jonathan's sister Elizabeth was arrested as an accessory to the murder, by Amos Mulliken, deputy sheriff, on November 9th, and lodged in the jail at Salem on the same day.

The court convened on the morning of Tuesday, the 14th, in the old court house that then stood in the middle of Washington street, opposite the Tabernacle church. The judges upon the bench were Benjamin Lynde, John Cushing, Peter Oliver and Edmund Trowbridge, and during the session they boarded with William Goodhue.

The jury impanelled to try the case consisted of Jonathan Orne of Salem, foreman, and John Gardner of Salem, William Bowden of Marblehead, Daniel Jacobs of Danvers, Thorndike Procter, jr., of Salem, William Becket of Salem, Richard Manning of Salem, Stephen Phillips of Marblehead, Thomas Grant of Marblehead, Theophilus Breed of Lynn, Mascol Williams of Salem, and Samuel Holton of Danvers.

The counsel for the king was Jonathan Sewall of Boston.

The counsel of the accused was John Adams, afterward president of the United States. He was, at this time, thirty-four years of age. In the trial of this case we can imagine the dignity and deliberation of his procedure, and the beaming of his intelligent face; which attracted so much attention when a few years later he became the man second in America to none but Washington.

The witnesses were summoned to present themselves at eight o'clock in the morning, and there was a host of them. There were Dr. Nathaniel Perkins and Dr. James Lloyd, both of Boston, Dr. Isaac Rand of Charlestown, David George and Josiah George, both of Newburyport,* Rev. Samuel Pearley of Seabrook,† John Fowler of Ipswich, yeoman, Enoch Kimball, yeoman, John Chadwick, gentleman, and his wife Susannah, Prudence Tyler, singlewoman, Mehitable Tyler, wife of Gideon Tyler, Benjamin Porter, jr., yeoman, John Tyler and Jonathan Tyler (sons of Gideon Tyler), William Eiles, yeoman, Oliver Foster, yeoman, Jonathan Foster, gentleman, George Farnam, laborer, all of Boxford, Miriam Dole of Rowley, Joseph Manning, John Calfe, Ephraim Chadwick, Dr. Thomas Kittredge, Dr. Francis Hodgskins, Dr. John Manning, jr., Abraham How, yeoman, all of Ipswich, Elizabeth, wife of Richard Kimball, Dr. Moses Barker, Solomon Cole, yeoman, Daniel Long, yeoman, all of Andover, Sarah Estey of Middleton, spinster, Nathan Browne, gentleman, and Jonathan Cook, fisherman, both of Salem, Aaron Wood, esq., and Amos Kimball, yeoman, both of Boxford, Dr. William Hale of Boxford, Dr. Macajah Sawyer and Dr. Enoch Sawyer, jr., both of Newburyport, Dr. Nehemiah Abbot of Andover, Lucy, wife of Abraham How, Ezekiel Potter, yeoman, and Martha Pearley, spinster, both of Ipswich, Dr. Ward Noyce of Andover, Moses Dole, yeoman, Daniel Spafford, gentleman, and Robert Cregg, yeoman, all of Rowley, Moses George of Newburyport, shipwright, Mary, wife of Isaac Blunt of Andover, Sarah Porter, widow, and Dea. Thomas Chadwick, both of Boxford, John Barker of Andover, Dr. Henry Dow Banks of Haverhill, and Richard Dole and his wife Miriam of Boxford.

Mrs. Ames "was thereupon brought and set to the bar and arraigned and upon her arraignment pleaded not guilty and for trial put herself upon God and the country,"—so runs the official record. The jury were then sworn to try the issue.

The trial began at nine o'clock; and the substance of the evidence, according to the report of the case in the then current Essex Gazette, was as follows:—

"That on a violent Suspicion that the said Ruth Eames, who died the Beginning of last May, was poisoned, her Body, five Weeks after the Burial, was taken up; and a Number of Physicians, summoned on the Jury of Inquest, on opening the same, and finding a Substance, which they believed to be Arfenick or Ratfbane, adhering to the Coats of the Stomach, were unanimously of Opinion, that she lost her Life by Poison: That, to corroborate this Opinion, it appeared that one Mrs. Kimball went to see the Deceased the Morning before her Death, and on signifying her Desire of going up Chamber, the Prisoner (who was Mother in Law to the said Deceased, and resided in the same House with her) made an Objection to it, intimating that her Daughter was very ill, and had vomited and purged so much as to render it very disagreeable to enter the Chamber; notwithstanding which, Mrs. Kimball went up, found (the Reverse of what had been told her by the Prisoner) the Chamber clean and agreeable, and no Signs of vomiting or purging, but found the Deceased almost or quite in the Agonies of Death, with Froth or Phlegm issuing out of her Mouth, and expired soon after, viz. between 11 and 12 o'Clock in the Forenoon, having been ill from about seven in the Morning: That before her Death, the Prisoner said, she would certainly die, for her Disorder was the same that one Mrs. Chandler died of some Years before, and was as mortal as the Plague; and that there would be another Death in the Family soon (meaning an Infant which the Deceased, its Mother, had lately suckled): That on laying out the Body, livid Spots, an Indication of Poison, appeared on one of her Arms: That the Prisoner, when she was assured the Body would be dug up, expressed much Concern, and said she should not live a Month: That since her Imprisonment, she has said, she believed her Daughter was poisoned, and that her Son Jonathan (Husband to the Deceased) did it; and asked whether she could not turn King's Evidence."

The court thought proper to admit the evidence of Jonathan, who had turned King's evidence against his mother.

"By his Testimony, it appeared, that, five or six Days before his Wife died, his Mother told him, that she would deprive him of his Housekeeper (as she called his Wife) if she did it by a Portion of Ratsbane; and the Night before her Death, he saw his Mother give his Wife a Piece of Bread and Butter, with Ratsbane on it, as near as he could tell; and said that since he has heard the Doctors tell what Ratsbane is, he is certain that it was that; and that he cautioned his Wife against taking it."

The trial continued through the short November day, and the dusk of evening found the court in session. Candles were lighted, and dimly dispelled the darkness of the ancient court room. Gloom must have settled on the prisoners, who knew not what the result of the trial might be, and the jury, too, could not have escaped from the feeling of awe that their duty that night must give or take a human life.

The trial wore on. The midnight hour approached and passed before the lawyers began their arguments to the jury.

John Adams spoke first. With all the solemnity of the hour and the occasion, he urged the jury to give release to the prisoner. As the substance of his argument, he said that by the evidence it did not appear that Mrs. Ames had been guilty of any ill behavior toward the deceased during their residence together in the same house; that it was the opinion of physicians that it was very improbable, if not impossible, that arsenic should lie so long in the body, as it was said it did in that of the deceased, that is, from some time in the evening till seven o'clock in the morning, before it operated; that the body, when taken up, was not putrefied in such a manner as it must have been had the deceased been poisoned; and that the evidence of the prisoner's son, Jonathan Ames, was not to be relied on, as he had sworn before the coroner, at the time the body was taken up, that he had no knowledge of any one's poisoning his wife; and now, in order to get clear himself, was so base as to give testimony which not only rendered him guilty of perjury, but had a direct tendency to take away the life of his own mother.

In reply Jonathan Sewall said, in substance, that the deceased on the same day that she ate the bread and butter dined on a fish called shad, and in the evening following ate a hearty supper of the same kind of fish; which, together with the quantity of butter on the bread, with which, it was said the arsenic was mixed, and some Spermaceti which she took soon after, might very probably tend to delay the operation of the arsenic; or, that which the prisoner gave the deceased, on the bread and butter, might have been salt, and that Jonathan was made to believe that it was ratsbane, as an artifice to render a discovery more difficult and perplexing, and that she in fact administered the arsenic the next morning; that as to the body's not being putrefied as much as might be expected it was the opinion of physicians that so large a quantity of arsenic might be received into the stomach as to cause violent convulsions and contractions of the large and small orifices, which might bring on death before the poison had mixed with the blood, and therefore a speedy putrefaction, as in cases wherein the body swells, might not take place; that the prisoner's son, Jonathan Ames, was a legal witness; and that it could not be supposed that he would come into court, and, in a most solemn manner, swear to that which was false, when he must be convinced that his evidence would probably be the means of taking away the life of her who bore him.

Three of the judges, in summing up the evidence, were clear and explicit in declaring their opinion that the circumstances proved amounted to "a violent presumption" that the prisoner was guilty. The other judge was not so clear in his opinion and said that a doubt might arise concerning the prisoner's guilt from the judgment of the physicians in her favor. The case was then committed to the jury, and the court adjourned at two o'clock in the morning until nine o'clock.

At nine o'clock the court came in, the prisoner was placed at the bar, and the jury rendered their verdict which cleared the prisoner from the bands of the law at least. The record continues, "It is therefore considered by the court that the said Elizabeth Eames go without day."

The record of the court closes as follows:—

"Upon the motion of John Adams Esq^r. attorney to Jonathan Eams jun^r. and Elizabeth Eams Jun^r. who stand committed to his majesty's Goal in this county, viz The said Jonathan for the murder, and the said Elizabeth as being accessory to the murder of One Ruth Eams, be discharged the King's attorney not objecting—

"Salem november 15th : 1769. Judgment was entered according to the Verdicts and Complaints, &c, and the court is adjourned without day."

The next spring, Jonathan Ames, senior, sold the farm, and the family removed to some place unknown to the people of the parish, being virtually exiled from all their old associations and homeland.

BATTLE OF SARATOGA, 1777.

BY GEORGE W. PIERCE.

The following is an extract from a letter written by Gen. E. Mattoon, dated Amherst, Mass., Oct. 7, 1835, and addressed to Philip Schuyler:—

"The British army, with its left resting on the river, commanded by Phillips, their centre by Gen. Reidesel, and extreme right extending to the Heights, was commanded by Lord Balcarras, where he was strongly fortified. Their light troops were under the command of Gen. Fraser and Lord Auckland (Ackland).

"About one o'clock of this day two signal guns were fired on the left of the British army, which indicated a movement. Our troops were immediately put under arms and the lines manned. At this juncture Generals Lincoln and Arnold rode with great speed towards the enemy's lines.

"While they were absent the picket guards on both sides were engaged near the river. In about half an hour Generals Lincoln and Arnold returned to headquarters, where many of the officers collected to hear the report, Gen. Gates standing at the door.

"Gen. Lincoln says, 'Gen. Gates, the firing at the river is merely a feint; their object is your left; a strong force of 1500 men are marching, circuitously, to plant themselves on yonder height. That point must be defended, or your camp is in danger.' Gates replied, 'I will send Morgan with his riflemen and Dearborn's infantry.' Arnold says, 'That is nothing; you must send a strong force.' Gates replied, 'Gen. Arnold, I have nothing for you to do, you have no business here.' Arnold's reply was reproachful and severe. Gen. Lincoln says, 'You must send a strong force to support Morgan and Dearborn, at least three regiments.'

“Two regiments from Gen. Larned’s brigade and one from Gen. Nixon’s were then ordered to that station, and to defend it at all hazards. Generals Lincoln and Arnold immediately left the encampment and proceeded to the enemy’s lines. In a few minutes Capt. Furnival’s company of artillery, in which I was a lieutenant, was ordered to march towards the fire, which had now opened upon our picket in front, the picket consisting of about 300 men. While we were marching, the whole line, up to our picket or front, was engaged. We advanced to a height of ground which brought the enemy in view, and opened our fire. But the enemy’s guns, eight in number, and much heavier than ours, rendered our position untenable. We then advanced into the line of infantry. Here Lieut. McLane joined me. In our front there was a field of corn, in which the Hessians were secreted. On our advancing towards the cornfield a number of men rose and fired upon us. McLane was severely wounded. While I was removing him from the field the firing still continued without abatement.

“During this time a tremendous firing was heard on our left. We poured in on them our canister shot as fast as possible, and the whole line, from left to right, became engaged. The smoke was very dense, and no movements could be seen; but as it arose our infantry appeared to be slowly retreating, and the Hessians slowly advancing, their officers urging them on with their hangers. * * *

“The troops continuing warmly engaged, Col. Johnson’s regiment, coming up, threw in a heavy fire, and compelled the Hessians to retreat. Upon this we advanced with a shout of victory; at the same time Auckland’s corps gave way.

“We proceeded but a short distance before we came upon four pieces of brass cannon, closely surrounded by dead and dying; at a few yards further we came upon two more; advancing a little further we were met by a fire from the British infantry, which proved very fatal to one of Col. Johnson’s companies, in which were killed one sergeant, one corporal, and fourteen privates, and about twenty were wounded.

“The enemy advanced with a quick step, firing as they came on. In a short time they ceased firing and advanced upon us with trailed arms. At this juncture Arnold came up with Brooks’ regiment and gave them a most deadly fire, which soon caused them to face about and retreat with a quicker step than they advanced.”*

MARGARET.

She was a woman of a steady mind,
Tender and deep in her excess of love;
Not speaking much—pleased rather with the joy
Of her own thoughts. By some especial care
Her temper had been framed, as if to make
A being who, by adding love to fear,
Might live on earth a life of happiness.
Her wedded partner lacked not on his side
The humble worth that satisfied her heart—
Frugal, affectionate, sober, and withal
Keenly industrious. She with pride would tell
That he was often seated at his loom
In summer, ere the mower was abroad
Among the dewy grass—in early spring,
Ere the last star had vanished. They who passed
At evening, from behind the garden fence
Might hear his busy spade, which he would ply
After his daily work, until the light
Had failed, and every leaf and flower were lost
In the dark hedges. So their days were spent
In peace and comfort; and a pretty boy
Was their best hope, next to the God in heaven.

For most people these rough stones have little of interest. They may pause in momentary curiosity as they pass by and vainly attempt to decipher a moss-covered legend here and there. But to those who have eyes to see, and can "read between the lines," these old fields are fine indeed to roam in fancy-free.

ADAMS GENEALOGY.

THE name of Adams is variously spelled in the early Essex county records, appearing as Adam, Adams, Addam, Addams, Addom, Addoms, Addum, Addums, Adom, Adoms, Adum, Adums, etc.

Among the several early New England immigrants by the name of Adams, ROBERT ADAMS¹, born in 1601, a native of Devonshire, England, is at the head of a numerous and prominent family.* He was living in Ipswich, Mass., in 1635,

*The Adams family may rightly claim the oldest individual name on record, the word being derived from Adamah—"red earth." The first man was called Adam, from the earth of which he was created. Adams, in its early form Ap Adam, meaning "son of Adam," was first assumed, probably during the Crusades, when surnames came into general use throughout Europe.

The earliest yet known of the line was a John Ap Adam, "who came out of the Marches of Wales." He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Lord Gourney of Tidenham and Beviston, county of Gloucester, and was called to Parliament as Baron of the Realm from 1296 to 1307. This was under Edward I., called Longshanks. These arms were granted him: Ar., on a cross gu., five mullets or. In the upper part of a Gothic window on the southeast side of Tidenham church, near Chopstow, there is the name "Johes Ab Adams, 1310," and beneath it the above-named arms. This glass-work is finely executed, and both it and the church are in good preservation. This building was originally in Wales, but came within the limits of England later by a change in the boundary line. The crest, not on this window, but borne later by the family, is "a demi-lion out of a ducal coronet," with the motto Loyal au mort. Two other mottoes commonly used by this branch of the family are Aspire, persevere and indulge not, and Sub cruce veritas, the first being preferred by the descendants of Henry of Braintree.

The following is claimed as the English ancestry.

I. John Ap Adam, Baron of the Realm, 1296 to 1307; married Elizabeth Gourney.

in Salem, 1638 and 1639 (where he then had land granted to him), and finally settled in Newbury in 1640, where he afterward lived. He was a tailor and yeoman.

Mr. Adams married, first, Eleanor — before 1635; and she died in Newbury June 12, 1677. He married, second, Sarah (Glover), widow of Henry Short of Newbury, Feb. 6, 1678. He died Oct. 12, 1682; and his widow Sarah, Oct. 24, 1697.

The important facts and all dates in the above outline are taken from printed works. Much information was derived from Henry Whittemore's book, published by William McDonald, N. Y., 1893; The Book of Dignities, compiled by Joseph Hayden; and Maitland's History of London, London, 1756.

CAPT. ABRAHAM ADAMS³, born in Newbury May 2, 1676. He went to sea in early life, sailing first to the West Indies. He soon rose to the command of a vessel, and made fourteen trips to England, besides many trading voyages coastwise. He married Anne Longfellow, a niece of Judge Samuel Sewall, of Newbury, Dec. —, 1703. At that time his father gave him the "highfields," land just above the falls in Byfield, though the deed was not passed for two years; and Abraham became a farmer. Upon this land Capt. Abraham built his residence. This house, as it now appears, is shown in the frontispiece.* In it are the original deeds of the estate and two chairs which were brought to her new home by the bride. Many other relics,—desks, tables, spinning-wheels, chairs, warming-pans, china, pewter, a tall clock, a sword used in the battle of Bunker Hill, deeds, wills, the diary of Josiah Adams, silhouettes of colonial men and maids,—are now counted among the treasures of the place. Some of the original shingles and clapboards (covering a solid wall of home-made bricks) are yet in a good state of preservation on the west end of the house. But the diamond-paned windows, imported from England, have been removed. The smoothly finished beams, the great fire-places with their paneled sides, the heavy doors, the broad low stairs, the fine work in stairway and mantel, all speak of former pride and prosperity. The old house is now owned and occupied by Mr. George W. Adams, a direct descendant of the builder, who

* On returning from one of his voyages, Capt. Abraham Adams brought some apple trees, one shoot of which is still growing where he planted it. Tradition says that his oxen stopped in the ford at cart creek, while on his way with seed and plants from his father's farm, and he said, "I'd rather dump these seeds in the creek than put them in the ground." He became, however, in time, a successful farmer.

*Many stories of the old home are told.

A slave was brought on a visit from Derry, N. H., by David Adams; and once when sick, and no regular physician would attend him, a cow-doctor was called. He advised a hot bath; but as nothing large enough could be found, an old dug-out was dragged from the river, pitched and filled with boiling water. The negro was unceremoniously thrust therein, but escaped with his life.

A fire once broke out in the attic, and the slave rushed up stairs with a hatchet to cut a hole in the roof. But the hatchet being dull and the roof high, he made use of his head and battered at the roof until the sun shone through.

The last Indian of the neighborhood died on the doorstep of this house. One Indian was held as a slave by Samuel Adams (son of the builder), and his bunk is still to be seen in the old attic.

1707; but afterward lived in Rowley. In his early manhood he was a weaver by trade, but spent the remainder of his life as a farmer. He married Hannah Spofford of Rowley (published Feb. 20, 1707-8). TRAINING DAY.

“ Hay-foot! straw-foot!”
 That was what they said;
 Hardly knew that “ Eyes right ”
 Meant “ Look straight ahead.”
 Shambling, sheepish, clumsy;
 Awkward every way;
 How they made spectators laugh
 On Training day!

Very well! But after,
 When the fighting came,
 Was there room for laughter?
 Was there cause for shame?
 Grimmer grew the faces,
 Firmer grew the tread,
 As “ hay-foot, straw-foot ”
 Marched straight ahead.

PETITION OF SALEM FARMERS.

To the honor^{ed} Gene^{ll} COURT at Boston.

The humble petition of y^e Inhabatitance of y^e farmes belonging to Salem most humbly, sheweth—

Wheareas yo^r petitioners, have been required by o^r Commanders to attend y^e Military watch, at Salem Towne, which considering how remote our Dwellings are from y^e Towne, we did & doe still conceiue Law doth not require it of vs. But because we are men, Subject to be partiall in o^r owne case, and might not be acquainted, with all y^e Lawes, we did p^esent o^r request, to y^e Countie Court at Salem last June to giue vs their Judgment therin, Namely whether it weare, o^r duty by Law to attend the s^d watch or not And y^e judgment of y^e s^d Court, as far as we perceived was y^t wee weare, neither bound by Law, nor reason, to attend y^e s^d watch Except in case of an exigence which we do fully, consent too: if our dwellings wear many miles, further from y^e Towne, then they are, in case they wanted helpe and o^r selues in safty, yet notwithstanding the Judgment of the Court, they did againe, require vs, by express warrant in his majesties name, & p order of y^e Malitia, to attend y^e watch, and most of vs did obey, rather to avoyde any occasion, of trouble, because the spirits of men, seemed to be very high, then y^t we thought it, o^r duty by Law, Since wee p^resented o^r case, to Major Denison, whoe beinge y^e major, of this Regament, wee thought was y^e next pson, to seeke to for helpe, whoe did write in o^r behalfe, to diswade them, from any further troubling of vs, But all tooke noe effect, but still they warned vs, to watch by y^e Authority, afores^d, vntill y^e watch was ended, yo^r petitioners did also, request y^e last County Court, at Ipswich, to releiue vs, but y^e Court was pleased, not to determine y^e matter, but willing vs, rather p^rsent it to this hon^r Court, which we doe, as briefly as we can humbly beseeching this Hon^r Court to consider of o^r reasons which are as foloweth—

The remotness of o^r habitations from y^e Towne. Some of vs liue 10 miles Some 8 or 9 y^e neerist are at least fiue miles from Salem Meeting House vpon y^e Rhode and then tis neer a mile farther to y^e Centry place and both Horse & foote required to goe with Armes & Amunition every way fixt according to Law so that some of vs must trauell Armed ii miles to watch which is more then a Soldiers march that is vnder pay and yet not excused from paying o^r p^t to all charges both Ecclesiasticall & Ciuill besides y^e maintenance of o^r families these hard times when the hand of God is heavy vpon y^e Husbandman Seconty The distance of o^r Houses, one from another, Some a mile, some further that it is difficult, sending one Neighbour, to another, in dark nights, in a wilderness, y^t is so little cleared, & wayes so vnpassable. The weakness, of many of o^r families, when one Man, is taken away, the rest are some young, some sickly & weake, not able, to help them selues much less, to make any resistance, if violence, be offered, that y^e newes that wee are to watch, strikes like darts, to y^e Hearts of some, of o^r Wiues that are weake, that one man was forced to goe 4, or 5 miles, to get a man, to stay with his famylie, whilst him selfe, went to Salem Towne to watch.

The oportunity, & advantage that Indians and other, ill affected psons haue by knowlidg before, that such and such families, are such nights left destitute of helpe, for two, or three miles about, for warning of y^e watch, & watching is no priuet thing.

Ffor Example, there was 19 warned for one night, as will plainly appear by warrant, vnder the Capt^s owne hands, & by testimony, had they all gone, it would haue cleared y^e strength of 2 or 3 miles about.

If it be pleaded the number is altered, & but 4 warned for a night, for Answer as sometimes it falls, 4 will cleare two miles about. It may also bee Questioned, whether it be not, a profaination of y^e Lords day, for psons to traull so far Armed, as before expressed, on y^e Sabboth, to watch a populous Towne, in times of peace, concisting of neer 300, able psons wthin y^e limmits of the watch, and o^rselues left out.

Wheareas y^e Cap^t pleaded an exegence, at Salem Court, because, a Jarsie or Gernsy ship, came in as they s^d, in y^e night vndiscovered. To which we answer there were seuerall of vs, in company, with o^r Capt, at y^e ffort, & wee saw the ship some howres before night, & was discovered before night, in y^e Towne, to be a stranger, for how can it be thought, possible, y^t a ship could come in, in a cleare day, & non see her, considering, how many boates are dayly out, a fishing, and Cape pan, & Marblehead, lye before y^e harbor and many men, at worke at y^e ffort y^t day, besides apopulous Towne, they further pleaded, these weare dangerous times, & they were not able, to keep a watch without vs. For answer if wee should grant, that these times, are more dangerous than former yet not soe much to Salem Towne, as to o^rselues, & other places in this collony, for wee know no obligation, vpon y^e enemy, first to assault Salem Towne, when they may come to shore, at diuers other places & come vpon vs, & other places also by Land, and meet neither with fforte, nor 400 men vnder y^e warning of an alarm to oppose them.

Tis probable if the French, or Dutch should come, they will have a conuoy of Indians, from East or West, & come first vpon remote dwellers. The consideration whereof, is able to strike terror, into y^e Hearts of women, & weake ones, Especial-ly considering what dreadfull examples former times hath afforded, in that respect, in this Country from Indeans, and from others allso, in the night season, when their husbands haue absent If what hath been s^d may be granted, as it may in euery p^t be proued Then whether Salem Towne, hath not more cause, to send vs help, to  amongst o^rselues, then wee haue to go to them, they concisting, of * Not 50 psons able to watch, they a compact Towne, wee so scrattred y^t six or 8 watches will not secure vs, o^r Dwellings are so, scrattred & remote one from another, & so far from y^e Towne, That Cambridge village, or Milton, may as easye go to Boston, to watch as wee may to Salem Towne and leaue their families, in a great deale more safty, because they haue Townes neer to helpe them.

Yor petitioners humble request to this Hon^d Court is that you would be pleased to releue & ease vs from this burden of watching which is too heauy for vs, or o^r children to bear. Yor petitioners shall all wayes pray for you

A TALE OF IPSWICH.

BY EMILY PEARSON BAILEY.

Old Ipswich hills! oft sung and fair,
The sea winds cool their summer air;
The river winds throughout the town,
And long, gray roofs queer houses crown;
The aged elms, the crooked streets;
The old stone bridge, whereon one meets
The tide of travel to and fro
Or stops to mark the river's flow,
All now, in turn, before me pass,
I see them all in Fancy's glass,
And comes to me from grandsire down
A tale of this quaint olden town.

The time was June in sixty-three,
In the eighteenth century.
Since then we have improved our ways,
Our jokes were rude in those old days
And youthful blood, that later on Made soldiers brave at Lexington,
Would sometimes leap in wildest fun
And burst all bonds and riot run,
And oft times in some lonely place
Was seen some Brom Bones mirthful face.

Men, at that time, believed in ghosts,
And all abroad were Satan's hosts,
Minions of ill were in the air
And haunted places everywhere.
A pleasant road from town leads forth
To ancient Rowley on the north,
There, where the hill comes sloping down,
A house then stood, antique and brown,
A haunted house 'twas said to be,
But why has always puzzled me.

Its low, broad step wore welcome air
And groups of children sported there
And friends of high and low degree
Oft proved its hospitality.
Broad, fertile meadows stretched around,
The old-time posies there were found,

Sweet lilacs blossomed by the door,
An elm tree nodded just before,
The birds built nests, the bees hummed there
And all of life seemed good and fair.

Near by, one eve in rapture lost
A youth stood gazing at the host
That marches, nightly, through the skies
In glittering ranks before our eyes,
When fast approaching hoofs he heard;
His blood some imp of mischief stirred,
Suggesting youthful pranks as near
Two riders came his quickened ear
O'erheard one ask—"Now where's the ghost?"
Then laugh in scorn. At once a most Dread yell arose, while to one steed
The agile youth with lightning speed
From darkness leaped and, clasping fast
The frightened rider cried, "At last!"

O, terror smote those brave men then (Braggarts may prove the weakest men),
To horse they gave both spur and rein
And courage summoned all in vain;
Not once paused they to look behind
But onward sped like swiftest wind,
Past Egypt river, up the hill
Their frightened horses urging still.

Clatter of hoofs awoke the town,
The wild youth slipped from horse-back down
And in the darkness sped away,
Quietly laughing all the way.
Dogs barked, lights gleamed, men grasped their guns

And cowered in fear the timid ones,
While white-capped dames in their affright
Peeped from their doors to see the flight.

Thus riders rode with might and main
Until they reached the pleasant lane
Where sainted Parson R. abode,
His only fear the fear of God.
These called the good man from his bed
And when he heard their tale he said,
"Friends, let us pray. It is God's will
That, somehow, good shall conquer ill."

The voice of prayer, at silent night
Beneath the stars, calmed that wild fright
And pale men turned to face a ghost;
No ghost was there. All trace was lost,
But through the town the story went
With truth and falsehood strangely blent.

Gone are riders, the youth is gone,
Of house remains not e'en a stone,
And he who toiled men's souls to save
Has long been resting in his grave;
But Egypt river flows on still
The road still winds across the hill
And still, throughout the ancient town
This ghostly tale is handed down.
True are the parson's words for aye
For good, somehow, must win the day.

BEVERAGES IN THE OLD DAYS.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

ASIDE from water there were few if any table drinks in the seventeenth century. Cider was sometimes drunk with food about the middle of the century and afterward for a hundred years. Wine was also drunk, but sparingly. The only early beverage that would today be esteemed a proper table drink was chocolate, which was then manufactured by Spaniards. When an unusual treat was desired, a kettle was hung over the fire, and water, milk and chocolate mixed therein. This was brought to a boil, and drank.

Tea was unknown here in primitive times. Some of the wealthier families used it about 1718, and it slowly came into general use. Other people rarely indulged in the luxury, except when they had company. With the Revolution came the refusal to drink the tea of commerce, and our four-leaved loosestrife, being dried and steeped, was used in its stead. This was known as "Liberty tea." It was prepared by being pulled like flax, its stocks, stripped of their leaves, boiled, and the leaves put into an iron kettle and basted with the liquor from the stocks. After this process the leaves were removed into platters and placed in an oven to dry.

Coffee was not used here till about 1770. During the Revolution it was very scarce and high, and consequently but little was imported. In its place, rye, beets, peas, potatoes, and sweet corn were used, being roasted or burned, as coffee was, and then ground in the old-fashioned family coffee mills.

The earliest common drink of our early settlers was beer, which was strictly of two kinds,—first, that fermented from malt liquors, with hops, etc., and second, the fermented extract of roots and other parts of plants, as spruce, ginger, sassafras, etc. Ale was a sweet beer, made strong, but with few hops. Beer continued to be the common drink of the settlers, the families brewing it themselves until the apple orchards began to bear. Then cider mills were erected and cider was made. This took the place of beer to a great extent, remaining the principal intoxicating drink of the rural sections to the present time. Brandy appears to a slight extent in early times, and a strong beer called mum was drunk here for a short time about 1672, having been imported from Germany. Strong water was the name of any liquor that contained a large proportion of alcohol, with the exception of wine. Wine used here in early times was of several kinds. The sack, a sweet Spanish wine, resembling sherry, was the earliest variety. The white and claret were French wines. There were also the muskadel and alligant. Rum was used very early and has continued to be a common drink of the stronger sort. It was a liquor widely known and manufactured and was brought here at first from various European countries. It was distilled from the juice of the cane, the scummings of the juice from the boiling house, or from molasses, as in modern times. Whiskey is a later drink.

England furnished to our earliest settlers most of their intoxicating liquors, but soon the Spanish, French and Dutch vessels brought cargo after cargo of their respective productions to our shores.

Breweries were the first liquor manufactories here, being licensed first in 1637. These made the stronger beer. Maltsters boiled and dried the barley and wheat into malt for the brewers to make beer of. The malt establishments were coeval with the breweries. The settlers raised large crops of grain, and they took their barley to the maltsters to be malted, as they took their corn to the grist mill to be ground, or, later, their apples to the cider mill to be made into cider, the maltster taking his toll. Rum distilleries were established quite early, Emanuel Downing of Salem having the first one; it being erected in 1648.

The first reference to liquor here is found in a letter dated May 28, 1628, written by the governor of the New England company to the governor of the London plantation in New England, which says: "We pray your endeavor though there be much strong water sent for sale, yet so to order it, that the savages may not for lucre's sake be induced to the excessive use, or rather abuse, of it, and at any hand take care our people give no ill example. If any get drunk, make an example of them," etc.

There were no alcoholic, certainly no distilled, liquors among the Indians. They probably had some concoction made from plants, which slightly inebriated them, but nothing that could be compared with the "fire-water," which they called the strong liquors of their pale-faced supplanters. They had no moral sentiment to restrain them, and their lust for liquor was so great that they deeded away the land of their fathers, their own birthright, for a few drinks of rum. The town of Boxford, containing many thousands of acres, for instance, was purchased for nine pounds in money and "rum and vittels enuf," as the records have it.

All kinds of liquors were sold freely till July, 1633, when the general court passed a law that no person sell wine or strong water without license from the governor or deputy governor, and that no strong water should be sold or given to the Indians.

But in 1644 the general court changed its mind, saying that "It is not fit to deprive ye Indians of any lawful comfort which God alloweth to all men by ye use of wine," and passed a law making sales to Indians lawful. In 1654, the court, finding that the savages were "frequently overcome, and thereby guilty of swinish drunkenness," ordered that none but two persons in this county should sell to them, and they only when they deem it necessary. These two men first chosen were William Moody of Newbury and John Frye of Andover. Three years later, though the number of dealers had been reduced to two, the court says: "There being little or no reformation among the Indians, complaints from all parts of the country and frequent experience show that no moderation can be attained to prevent drunkenness amongst them, the fruits whereof are murder and other outrages," and it is ordered that they "hereby wholly prohibit all persons, of what quality soever, henceforth, to sell, truck, barter or give any strong liquors to any Indians, directly or indirectly, whether known by the name of rum, strong water, wine, strong beer, brandy, cider or perry, or any other strong liquor, going under any other name, whatsoever," except as medicine, on penalty of forty shillings per pint. Notwithstanding this strict prohibition in regard to selling to the Indians, the liquor dealers did sell to them, and the court in 1666, after speaking of the great increase of drunkenness among them, ordered, that every one finding, seeing, or knowing any Indians to have any strong liquor (except as medicine) should have power to seize the same, and arrest the possessor, who should be imprisoned until he told where he got it. This law was repealed in 1694, but the Indians by that time were seldom seen in the county.

The first court was established in Essex county in 1636, and in the first pages of its records the first trial for drunkenness appears.

The first revenue from liquor selling was obtained in 1636, when the court ordered that no one buy or receive out of any ship any wine or strong water, unless they pay one-sixth of it, if bought for wholesaling, and one-third, if for retailing, as revenue.

In 1637, the court, upon "many sad complaints," ordered that nothing stronger than that which can be sold for one penny per quart should be sold. Two years later the strength was increased to two pence per quart. In 1638, one in each town was appointed by the respective towns, and no others, to sell wine and strong water. The early licensees under this law were Mr. Gott in Salem, Mr. Symonds in Ipswich, Edward Woodman in Newbury, William Fiske in Wenham, Sebastian Brigham in Rowley, Obadiah Bowen in Gloucester, etc. In 1639, the drinking of healths was prohibited because it caused "drunkenness, quarreling, bloodshed, uncleanness, mispent time," etc. The law was repealed in 1645.

The revenue was increased in 1644, vintners paying twenty shillings per butt of sack, and five shillings per hogshead of French and other wines.

All customs, profits and emoluments or wine selling to the government of the colony were sold to one man for £107 10s. for one year. In 1648 they were sold to two men for £120 per year for four years.

In 1645, the quarterly court was granted authority to issue licenses, and the fines for drunkenness were also fixed: first offence, a fine of ten shillings or ten stripes; second offence, twenty shillings or three hours in the stocks, and third offence, thirty shillings or imprisonment.

In 1646, the general court reached a foundation principle when they said that, "Forasmuch as drunkenness is a vice to be abhorred of all nations, especially of those who hold out and profess the gospel of Christ Jesus, and seeing any strict law against this sin will not prevail, unless ye cause be taken away," etc., and it might be expected that the statute which followed this preamble would contain a prohibition of the traffic, but instead of that an annual fee for the licenses was fixed, viz., Salem dealers to pay fifteen pounds, Lynn, Ipswich and Marblehead two pounds each, Newburyport one pound, and Salisbury, ten shillings. Also, informers of unlicensed dealers were to have one-half of the fines; and licenses were to be granted to "men of good report and ability to manage ye calling."

In 1649, the court, conceiving that wine cost so much that people could not afford to purchase it as a regular drink, ordered that the retailers keep good and wholesome beer.

In 1653, the marshal was to have the revenue from the retailing of liquor for his salary, for two years.

Notwithstanding the many laws that had been passed, in 1670 the general court received many complaints of "persons spending their time and estate by drinking and tipping in taverns and ale-houses," and they sought another remedy to prevent it. They ordered that the selectmen should post up in each saloon the names of immoderate drinkers. This law remained in force until about 1820.

In 1681, the selectmen of towns must approve of the licenses before they could be granted; and in 1684 the licensed dealers were given one-half of the fines for complaining of unlicensed dealers.

But in spite of all these "good and wholesome" laws, saloons increased in number and drunkenness in amount.

In the court records of the early times drunkenness appears as the most common crime, there being several degrees of it, as shown by the records. The church records are also replete with cases of discipline for this sin; and the ministers themselves were guilty of flagrant breaches of morality in this line, as in the case of the first minister of Topsfield.

Among the first attempts to restrain the increasing amount of drunkenness a pamphlet, entitled "The Famous Tryal of Sir Richard Rum," was published.

The records show the manner of conducting one of the saloons in 1690. An Andover retailer* had become obnoxious to the people, and in their petition to the court not to grant him his petition for a license they say, that the "epidemical evil overspreads and is like to corrupt the greater part of our town if not speedily prevented; * * he had indeed the approbation of the selectmen that were picked out for that end in his first setting up; * * and at his first setting up he seemed to have some tenderness of conscience not to admit of excess nor disorder in his house; but custom in his way of dealing and the earnest desire of money hath proved an evil root to him actively, and effectively to others, for through his forwardness to promote his own gain, he hath been apt to animate and entice persons to spend their money and time to ye great wrong of themselves and family they belong to; and to that end will encourage all sorts of persons, both old and young, to spend upon trust, if they have not money, and to some he will proffer to lend money to spend rather than that they should be discouraged from such a notion; servants and children are allowed by him in his house at all times unseasonably by night and day, sometimes till midnight and past till break of day, till they know not their way to their habitations; and gaming is freely allowed in his house, by which means the loser must call for drink, which is one thing that will uphold his calling. Many such particulars might be instanced and easily proved, but we are willing for brevity's sake to omit much of what could be said of the like nature, but be sure if he be not restrained from the selling of drink our town will be for the greatest part of our young generation so corrupted thereby that we can expect little else but a course of drunkenness of them; and what comfort will that be to parents to see such a posterity coming upon the stage after them."

The licensee received no formal document; but he had to give a bond, the condition of which showed his rights and liabilities. One, in 1692, is conditioned as follows, viz: "To keep a common house of entertainment and to use common selling of ale, beer, cider, &c., * * in the now dwelling house of [the licensee] * * and no others. * * He shall not permit, suffer or have any playing at dice, cards, table quoits, loggets, bowles, ninepins, billiards, or any other unlawful game or games in his house, yard, garden, or backside. * * Nor shall sell any wine or liquors to any Indians or negroes, or suffer any servants or apprentices or any other person to remain in his house tippling or drinking after nine o'clock in the night-time; to keep the true assize and measure, * * and in uttering ale, beer, cider, wine, rum, &c., to sell by sealed measure. And in his said house shall maintain good order and rule."

Concerning the intoxication of those times, the celebrated Cotton Mather, in his "Magnalia Christi Americana," says "There is much intemperance. * * 'Who hath woe? They who tarry long at the wine.' Is it no harm for a man to bring sickness on his body? We have seen drunkards often perishing in diseases contracted by their debauches. Is it no harm for a man to bring disgrace on his esteem? We have often seen drunkards become very abjects, though they once were folks of some fashion and figure in the world. Is it no harm for a man to bring poverty on his estate? We have often seen the judgments of God fulfilling that word, 'The drunkard shall come to poverty.' Surely, 'tis no little harm for men to debase and confound their own souls, and lay themselves open unto the worst of all the temptations of the devil—the worst of all impieties. But, sirs, how often have we seen woful drunkards doing so? We have seen them turn beasts,—yea, turn devils! * * We have seen it so often, that I am amazed at you, O ye drunkards of New England—I am amazed that you can 'harden your hearts' in your sin. * * Yea, and we have seen the devil that has possessed the drunkard, throwing him into the fire as well as into the water, and then kept shrieking, 'fire!

fire !' till they have gone down to the fire that never shall be quenched. Yea, more than one or two drunken women, in this very town, have, while in their drink, fallen into the fire, and so they have tragically gone roaring out of one fire into another. * * Drinking houses have been a most undoing stumbling block of iniquity in the midst of us. The judgments of God brought us into a time when unsufferable villianies were perpetrated everywhere, under the pretence of the excise. * * * Trade on, ye merchants of souls, or, more truly, ye butchers of souls. Trade on, till the judgments of God have caused you to trade yourselves into beggary at the last ! But know, that the ' blood of souls ' will be found on your skirts."

We have seen that the colonial legislation was aimed at two things—to keep the use of liquor within moderate bounds and to obtain revenue from the sale of it. The law as we left it at the close of the seventeenth century continued about the same, and indeed to the present time with slight changes and the exception of one or two short seasons of prohibition in this century.

Up to about fifty years ago all classes drank. At trainings, ordinations, huskings, funerals, weddings,—indeed at all social and public gatherings liquor was freely indulged in. The people loved their drink—in their minds it added to hospitality, it lent wisdom and acuteness to debate, eloquence to the speaker, strength and endurance to the muscular effort. It was the article most often purchased at the grocery.

Drunkenness was as common in the eighteenth as it had been in the seventeenth century. In Salem, in 1773, there were fifteen retailers. The selectmen then said to the general court, that " It is with the utmost concern that we see such multitudes grasping at gains, which are the price of the blood of the souls of their neighbors and fellow-citizens, who are precipitated to inevitable ruin and destruction by the intemperate use of strong drink." They ask that only eight retailers be allowed.

After the Revolution the production of liquor had greatly increased, and intemperance was more prevalent than ever.

There have always been some people who felt the evils of strong drink and avoided it. Abstinence from distilled liquor as a daily drink was observed by a few about the time of the Revolution. Then some drank distilled liquors but rarely ; others drank no liquors regularly, and one would sometimes be found who refrained from any use of them. Thus germinated the temperance reformation. The first temperance society in the State, and probably the first permanent one in modern times was "The Massachusetts Society for the Suppression of Strong Drink," formed in 1812. Several Essex county people belonged to it. Two years later an organization called the "Moral Society" sprung up in many of the towns in the county—Boxford, Danvers, Topsfield, and others. Temperance was its principal object. Wenhams, as far as has been learned, was the first town in the county to disapprove of liquor licenses, having voted that no licenses should be issued in 1825. Newbury followed in 1830, Danvers in 1833, and Amesbury in 1834. In 1826, the question came into politics, and about 1875 the prohibition party took the field.

NOTES.

John Warden, auctioneer, advertises to sell at auction in the new auction room, nearly opposite the naval-office in Salem, mahogany tables, looking-glasses, chairs, a two quart bell-metal skillet, brass kettles, pewter ware, a "very nice pair of polished Andirons," shovels, tongs, etc.—Essex Gazette, Oct. 11-18, 1768.

In the warrant calling a "meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of the East Parish of Bradford, Dec. 11th, 1795," is the following: "Article 2. To see if the parish will make Rowell Foot some consideration for three years' service in the last war, answering for a man for this parish, or act anything thereon."

The same article appeared at an earlier date (Sept. 20, 1786), "at the request of said Foot," and it was then voted to dismiss the same; but on Dec. 18, 1795, "It was voted to give Rowell Foot twenty dollars for his service during the last war." It would be interesting to know if every parish was required to furnish a man for the war, and why one only. This is the only item of the kind on the record.

OUR FATHERS' BURIALS.

They dared not plant the grave with flowers,
Nor dress the funeral sod,
Where, with a love as deep as ours,
They left their dead with God.

The hard and thorny path they kept
From beauty turned aside;
Nor missed they over those who slept
The grace to life denied.

Yet still the wilding flowers would blow,
The golden leaves would fall,
The seasons come, the seasons go,
And God be good to all.

Above the graves the blackberry hung
In bloom and green its wreath,
And harebells swung as if they rung
The chimes of peace beneath.

John G. Whittier.

ABRAHAM ADAMS⁴, born in Newbury Aug. 24, 1715. He was a yeoman, and also did some tanning, and lived in Rowley, except from 1742 to 1747, when he lived in Methuen. Oct. 20, 1747, he came into possession of what is known as the Shute place, on Nelson street, in South Georgetown. The house in which he resided, which was two stories in height, was but one room in width, without a kitchen in the rear, and stood between the present house and the road. He married, first, Mary Colman of Newbury Nov. 18, 1737. She died, of fever, at the birth of triplet children, May 6, 1752, at the age of thirty-five. The triplets died the same day. Mr. Adams married, second, Sarah Foster of Rowley Jan. 29, 1760. He became of unsound mind, and hung himself in the entry of his house on the night of Sept. 18, 1771, at the age of fifty-six.

ROWLEY, West Parish, 19th Sept. 1771.

We are here visited with one of the most surprising, awful and unfathomable Occurrences in God's permissive Providence. In the Dead of the last Night Mr. Abraham Adams was missing from his Bed; upon which his Wife arose, and called up a maid Servant in the House: They went to search for him in the House, and soon found him in the Entry, hanging by a Bridle, quite dead.

He was a Man of a fair and good Character, both for Morality and Christianity: No Man among us, perhaps, more accepted of the Multitude of his Brethren and Neighbours. But he was, thro' ill health, broken as to his Reason and moral Agency. This was evident to us all, last Year, for several Weeks, if not Months. His Disorder returned of late---so lately, that tho' it was well known in the Family, and some others had Opportunity to observe it, yet it was not generally known among us 'til we were surprized with the fatal effect.

May God shew Pity to the respectable, distressed Family, and teach us all to make some good Improvement of that which we cannot fully understand.

Mr. Adams' widow, Sarah, was living in 1791, and died in Boxford at her son-in-law, Benjamin Spofford's, with whom she had lived after 1786.

When the present Shute house was ready for occupancy about 1812 the old house was removed to King street, near the centre of Groveland, and is still occupied.

THE MOULTON PEDIGREE.

BY JOHN T. MOULTON.

1. ROBERT MOULTON, came from England, in 1629, to Salem, Mass., in a vessel called the George Bonaventure, one of the first fleet sent over to Governor Endicott with settlers and supplies. He was employed by the London Company, for a term of years probably, to superintend the building of vessels for the Massachusetts Bay colony, of which Endicott had taken charge the previous September, 1628. The spot where he settled and probably carried on the shipbuilding business is near the present corner of Fowler and Boston streets, at the head of North river. He owned a house there at the time of his death, and also a farm at Salem village, now Peabody. He was a resident of Charlestown for several years, and lived near the Charlestown end of Chelsea bridge, where he had a house, the spot being still called Moulton's point. He was representative to the general court from both Salem and Charlestown. He died at Salem in 1655. His will is preserved at the clerk of courts' office, Salem, and is dated Feb. 20, 1654. He left two children, a son Robert, and a daughter Dorothy, who married an Edwards.

2. ROBERT MOULTON, son of the above-named Robert, probably came from England with his father in 1629. In the spring of 1641, he married Abigail Goade, niece of Emanuel Downing, town clerk of Salem. He had land at Salem village granted him by the town, upon which he lived, dying in 1665. His wife died the same year. They had eight children, namely: Abigail, married Benjamin Belflower; Robert, married Mary Cook; Samuel, died unmarried; Hannah, married Thomas Flint; John, married Elizabeth Coréy; Joseph, of whom hereafter mention will be made; Miriam, married Joseph Bachelor; and Mary, married William Lord, jr. The wills of both Robert and Abigail, his wife, are on file at the clerk of courts' office, Salem.

3. JOSEPH MOULTON, son of the preceding Robert, was a seaman, and when 24 years old disposed of the property left him by his father. He was then unmarried. This is all that can be definitely settled concerning him by any record yet found, but as all the other children of Robert can be traced out in their families, excepting those who died unmarried, it is not only possible but very probable that he was the father of Joseph Moulton of Lynn; more than this, a tradition in the family points that way. He was born in Salem Jan. 3, 1656. Allowing his son Joseph to have been born in 1700, he would have been 44 years old at the time. The town line between Lynn and Salem is but a short distance from the old Moulton homestead, being now the line between Lynnfield and Peabody, and has never been changed since the original laying out of the towns. It was therefore a very easy matter for him to become a resident of Lynn by removing a short distance.

4. JOSEPH MOULTON, probably son of the above Joseph, was married, at Lynn, Dec. 12, 1727, to Sarah Lilley, daughter of George Lilley, "both of Lynn." George Lilley was a resident of that part of Lynn now Lynnfield, and owned land there, which he sold. He removed to Windham, Conn., in 1708. At about the same time, many families from the vicinity removed to the same place, including Needhams, Flints, Greens, Shaws, Moultons, etc. His wife, Elizabeth (Hawkes), had recently died, and he had remarried, to Sarah Silsbee, of Lynn, with whom he took four children to their new home in Windham, leaving this Sarah less than two years old, with some kind friend, perhaps her grandmother Hawkes. That the other children all went to Windham is certain from the Windham records. There was no other family of Lillies in Lynn at the time of his removal. This Sarah was born May 26, 1705. At the time of her marriage she was therefore between twenty-two and twenty-three years old, and allowing her husband to have been born as before suggested, in 1700, he would have been at marriage twenty-seven years old. Joseph Moulton purchased land in Lynn Jan. 17, 1732-3, and May 14, 1733. This land is now in the rear of the city farm, on the road to Pine or Pan swamp. Here he spent his life, dying about 1766. He had four children, namely: Ezra, married Deborah Johnson; Solomon, died unmarried; Sarah, married James Green; and Ezekiel, married Catharine Hudson, daughter of Moses and Katherine (Kilby) Hudson.

5. EZEKIEL MOULTON, born at Lynn Nov. 17, 1740, was son of the preceding Joseph, and settled on the estate of his father, receiving quit claim deeds from the other heirs, Oct. 3, 1766. He occupied the premises thus obtained while he lived, pursuing the calling of a shoemaker, as his father did before him. He married, Nov. 2, 1771, Catharine Hudson, as before stated. She was born in the old Hudson house on Boston street, on the westerly side of Tower hill, the house having been torn down in 1876. He died Nov. 23, 1810. She died Jan. 1, 1833. They had ten children, namely: Joseph, born April 26, 1772; married Anna Mansfield Nov. 6, 1796. Solomon, born May 31, 1774; died, unmarried, Aug. 31, 1795. Ezekiel, born Dec. 17, 1775; married Rebecca Rhodes Dec. 25, 1806. Mary, born June 8, 1778; died, unmarried, Dec. 7, 1848. Catharine, born Sept. 23, 1780; died same day. Moses, born April 18, 1782; died July 2, 1787. John Lilley, born Nov. 6, 1784; married Sally Rhodes Nov. 1, 1807. Moses, born Aug. 21, 1787; died unmarried. Aaron, born June 19, 1791; married Sarah Palmer March 17, 1822. Solomon, born Oct. 19, 1795; died June 8, 1803.

6. JOSEPH MOULTON, first child of the preceding, born April 26, 1772; married Anna Mansfield Nov. 6, 1796; died at Northampton, Mass., Feb. 15, 1812. His wife died in Lynn April 6, 1810. Children: Joseph, born Feb. 7, 1798; married Relief Todd of Poultney, Vt., June 7, 1821, and died in Lynn, Feb. 10, 1873. Anna, born Jan. 16, 1800; died, unmarried, July 30, 1830. Elizabeth Mansfield, born Feb. 15, 1802; died, unmarried, July 11, 1852. William Perkins, born Aug. 15, 1805; married Sally M. Hulen, Jan. 24, 1847. Solomon, born Jan. 7, 1808; died, unmarried, May 26, 1827. Catherine.

THE OLD CELLAR.

The olden home is now no more,
The house, the barn, the well-sweep old,
With the old folks are things of yore,
Forgotten as the years have rolled.

Uncovered now the cellar walls
The tangled briars have overhung,
And snow, as swiftly down it falls,
Into the crevices is flung.

Upon this waste of barrenness,
Now only rocky pasture ground,
The walls though every year grown less,
Show where the road in old times wound.

But poplars from old Lombardy
In silence rear their heads of snow, Half dead, half living, seemingly,
Survivors of the long ago.

LOMBARDY POPLARS.

The Lombardy poplar trees are remarkable for their straight trunks and the nearly vertical growth of their branches. From remote times they have been inhabitants of Kashmir, the Punjab, and Persia, and from that region they were carried to Southern Europe.

Their popular name is derived from their abundance along the banks of the Po and other rivers of Lombardy.

They were introduced into France in 1749; and from thence into the United States about 1790. While envoy to France, Thomas Jefferson noticed the unique use of these trees in marking the course of turnpike roads and was struck with the luxuriance of their foliage. He encouraged their introduction into the United States, and they soon became common as marking the sides of turnpikes and boundaries of public squares. The Salem and Boston turnpike corporation voted May 4, 1802, to set the trees on both sides of their road. The Newburyport and Boston turnpike corporation also had some set out. When Salem common was levelled in 1802, there was a nursery adjoining thereto, in what is now Winter street, containing a large number of these trees, and they were set out along the borders of the square. The people soon discovered that they were not trees of beauty; and the great September gale of 1815 completed the desire to have them removed. They were either uprooted or broken down by the terrific wind, and were banished from the common, the present elm and other trees being set out in their places in 1817.

If these poplars were beautiful in France and Italy, they were not found to be so in New England. They were not suitable for our rigorous climate, and soon began to show indication of decay, dead branches appearing more and more frequently.

Political feeling was so strong in the old Jeffersonian days that these poplars were condemned by the Federalists on account of Jefferson having been instrumental in introducing them. Some of the Republicans planted these trees in front of their residences to show their allegiance to Jeffersonian principles, and the enraged Federalists were guilty of injuring and destroying them. This was true in Salem in 1801 in several instances, the mischief being of course done under cover of darkness. Capt. Samuel Very, who lived at Buffum's corner, offered a reward of twenty dollars for the conviction of the person or persons who injured the trees before his house.

For a few years the setting out of these trees was a fad, which had its short run. Few of the old trees remain, even in decay, some being found on sections of the turnpike roads, and a few in Beverly and Groveland, and on the Pickman farm in Salem. They are sometimes found by old cellars on deserted homesteads, tall and erect and apparently dead, standing like grim sentinels in a dreary vigil.

The fancy for these trees has slightly revived during the last two or three years, and they have been set out in Beverly, Newburyport and other places.

THE MANUFACTURE OF NAILS IN ESSEX COUNTY.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

FOR more than a century and a half after the settlement of Essex county all nails were made by hand. Large quantities were used, and a great deal of manual labor was expended in their manufacture. They were usually forged from strips of iron of good quality called nailrod, being bars rolled at the mills into a size suitable for the purpose. Nailrod was flat, about three-eighths of an inch wide and three-sixteenths thick, and remains of that size at the present day.

The making of nails has always been the first accomplishment of blacksmith's apprentices, who probably made the larger part of the hand-wrought nails used in this county.

The appliances for hand manufacture were simple and few. A small forge, a small anvil, having a chisel set in it, a hammer, and a "bolster," comprised the outfit, with the exception of a pair of tongs with which to handle the nailrod when the bar became short. The "bolster" was a piece of steel, ordinarily about ten inches in length, one and a quarter inches wide, and half an inch thick. If only one size of nails was to be made by it there was a hole of the size of the wire of the nail to be made in one end of it. If two sizes were to be wrought with it, there was a different sized hole in the other end.

The operation was simple, and quickly done by a dexterous hand. The rod was first heated, which in a hot forge fire was done in a moment or two, but generally two rods were heating at a time, that no time might be lost by waiting for a heat.

When heated, the end of the rod was rounded to the size desired by being pounded with the hammer on the anvil, then pointed or flattened. A little uneven mass, slightly rounded, was left for the head, and on the chisel, by a stroke of the hammer, the section was nearly severed just above the part left for the head. It was then re-heated, for being so small the rod cools quickly, and when of the right heat the end was thrust into one of the holes of the "bolster," and severed from the rod by a twist of the hand. The "bolster" was held on the anvil in the left hand by the end that was not in use, and with the hammer in the right hand the nail maker drove it to its head, which was quickly formed by a few skillful blows. The heads were generally oval, round and from one-half to three-fourths of an inch in diameter. Sometimes, for special uses, the head was made long and narrow, and then it was called a "T" head.

Brads and other kinds of small nails as well as spikes were made in the same way. Horse-shoe nails required the best Swedish iron and the most skillful workmanship, as tough and hard hoofs were liable to break or split them, and thus injure the foot.

In the early days, large quantities of nails were imported from England, Birmingham and its vicinity being the place of their manufacture. They were made there much cheaper than they could be here. But after the trouble with the mother country began, in 1767, "sheathing and deck nails" were included in the non-importation agreement of the American merchants; and in January, 1774, the Provincial congress recommended, among other things, the manufacture of nails.

The Revolution caused a great scarcity of nails, and when the war was over their manufacture received a great impulse. Many of the farmers set up little forges in their kitchens, and in the long winter evenings and cold stormy days made nails, the children rendering assistance. So many of the people did this that large quantities of nails were thus produced. The nailrod was furnished to them by merchants, to whom the nails were duly returned, compensation being made for the work and cost of manufacture.

The demand was so great and the hand method of manufacture so expensive and slow that American inventors turned their attention to devising some mechanical contrivance that would perform the work. The old world kept on in its old fashioned methods, and allowed America to produce the first nails made by machinery.

Jeremiah Wilkinson of Cumberland, R. I., a manufacturer of hand cards for carding cotton and wool, about 1775 adopted the plan of cutting the tacks he used from a sheet of iron with a pair of shears, and afterward heading them in a vice. He subsequently cut nails in a similar way, and is said to have been the first to make nails and tacks in that manner.

It is claimed that Ezekiel Reed, a native of Bridgewater, about 1786 invented a machine for cutting cold tacks and nails, which was adopted at Abington.

The first machines to make complete nails was invented by an Essex county young man in 1790. This was Jacob Perkins, son of Matthew and Jane (Noyes) Perkins, of Newburyport, where he was born July 9, 1766. He was sent to the district school at the usual age, and continued to receive instruction there until he was twelve. His father being poor, he was then apprenticed to a goldsmith in Newburyport named Davis, having indicated a fondness for the mechanic arts, which probably germinated by hearing a watch tick, and in the execution of a purpose to know why and how it ticked. The business of the goldsmith was the making of gold beads, which were then commonly worn by girls and women. Mr. Davis died three years later, and Mr. Perkins, then only fifteen, continued the business, adding the manufacture of the then popular shoe-buckles. He was industrious and honest, and soon secured an excellent reputation. He also made the Portugese joes which were then in circulation. He discovered a new method of plating shoe-buckles, and was by the new process enabled to undersell all competitors. Before he was of age he turned his attention to machinery.* When twenty-one, he was employed by the master of the Massachusetts mint to make a suitable die for striking copper coins, and the result of his genius was the die which formed the old cent bearing the engraving of the eagle and the Indian.

At the age of twenty-four, in 1790,† he invented machines for cutting and heading nails—machines which, with subsequent improvements, increased the daily product of one man's labor from one thousand nails to one thousand pounds. It is said that he produced this machine at Byfield, where he made the first cut nails in America, in the barn of Leonard Adams.

At Amesbury, there were iron works, and Mr. Perkins went there and perfected his nail machine, a patent being granted to him therefor Jan. 16, 1795. The heading machine would head six thousand brads an hour, and the slitting machine would cut several times as many, very little personal supervision being needed. The carpenters approved of the nails, and they came into immediate use.

*The building occupied by Jacob Perkins as a laboratory and workshop in Newburyport is still standing in the rear of a dwelling house on the upper side of Fruit street. It is of brick, and three-storied, narrow in proportion to its height, and sadly out of repair. I think the lower part is used for storage.—Emily A. Getchell.

†Samuel Rogers of Bridgewater claimed that he made a machine for making nails at the same date. See Essex Registry of Deeds, Executions, book 3, leaf 150.

The old corn mill, run by water power, formerly known as Barnard's, and at that time as Waite's mill,* was then standing on the south bank of the Powow river, in Amesbury, on the east side of Main street; and, Nov. 24, 1795, Mr. Perkins purchased it of the Newburyport Woolen Manufactory (Ebenezer Stocker, Abraham Wheelwright and Ebenezer Wheelwright, all of Newburyport, merchants, directors), with

* This corn mill, according to Merrill's History of Amesbury, was erected by Abraham Morrill and Henry Saywood in 1642. Mr. Merrill died in 1662; and his widow, Sarah, who was one of the executors, married Thomas Mudgett of Salisbury. A part owner of the mill, Dec. 1, 1688, was Thomas Barnard, sen., of Amesbury, and evidently his share was uncertain, as on that date he and Thomas Mudgett submitted the matter to Maj. Daniel Davison and Ens. Nathaniel Clarke, both of Newbury, Maj. Robert Pike of Salisbury, and Mr. Edward Gove of Hampton, N. H., as arbitrators. They reported, nineteen days later, that Mr. Mudgett owned two-thirds and Mr. Barnard one-third of the mill.

Mr. Barnard became the owner of the whole of the mill, and April 22, 1712, conveyed to his daughter Sarah, wife of Samuel Jones of Amesbury, one-half of it; and, June 12, 1712, he conveyed the other half to his son Samuel Barnard of Amesbury.

June 11, 1720, Mr. and Mrs. Jones conveyed their half to Thomas Waite of Hampton, N. H., and in his will, dated Jan. 12, 1740, and proved June 6, 1743, Mr. Waite devised his half to his son Samuel Waite, who was the miller. Aug. 15, 1786, Samuel conveyed one-quarter of the mill to David Morrill of Salisbury, blacksmith; and, Dec. 13, 1787, his remaining quarter to Joseph Osgood of Salisbury.

One-half of the half interest of Samuel Barnard was owned by Ichabod Titcomb of Amesbury, shipwright, in 1794, by mesne conveyances unknown to the writer. The other half of Samuel Barnard's interest he conveyed to his son Jonathan Barnard of Amesbury, innholder, in 1732-33. Jonathan died Sept. 27, 1770, having devised his interest in the mill to his son Samuel. Samuel conveyed the interest to his eldest son Jonathan Barnard of Amesbury (then a boy) Jan. 24, 1772, who, June 28, 1785, as administrator with the will annexed of his father's estate, by license of court, conveyed this interest to his grandmother, Tabitha Barnard, widow of Capt. Jonathan Barnard. She conveyed it to John Barnard of Amesbury, gentleman, Feb. 22, 1786; and, May 24, 1792, he conveyed it to Enoch Bartlett of Amesbury, joiner.

the land, for eight hundred dollars.* Apparently Mr. Perkins continued the business of grinding corn, and utilized more or less of the water power for driving his nail machinery.

Early in the spring of 1798, Mr. Perkins became acquainted with Samuel Guppy of New York, and John Warren Armstrong, formerly of Bristol, England, but then of Boston, merchant, and a partnership for the manufacture of nails was formed by the three men with the firm name of Armstrong & Perkins, and Perkins conveyed the mill and factory to Mr. Armstrong, who was evidently the capitalist of the company, April 11, 1798.† Their products were known as the Newburyport patent nails and brads.

While Mr. Perkins was in business for himself, he invented and made a machine for cutting and heading nails at one operation. The machinist who helped him do this was David Mooers of Exeter, N. H. In a suit brought on this and similar patents many years afterward, Mr. Mooers made an affidavit relative to what he knew of Perkins' machine,§ and in it stated that he came to work in the nail factory for Mr. Perkins (who still lived in Newburyport) in December, 1797. Soon after, he says that Mr. Perkins invented and made a machine for cutting and heading nails at one operation. He worked upon the machine from the time it was begun until it was done and put into use, all of which was done under the immediate direction of Mr. Perkins. It was in complete operation in the following summer. After making about fifty or sixty pounds of six-penny nails, Mr. Perkins found that once in a while a comb, the owners of the whole title, conveyed the mill to Michael Hodge of Newburyport, gentleman; and March 25, 1794, Mr. Hodge conveyed it to the Newburyport Woolen Manufactory, which, Nov. 24, 1795, conveyed it to Jacob Perkins as above stated.

The mill was known as Barnard's and Waite's mill respectively.

nail would stick in the heading dies, and he concluded to attempt some further improvement on the clearer. The machine was thereupon taken to pieces. Mr. Mooers took the stationary part of it to his viceboard, and Mr. Perkins told him that in the afternoon he would tell him what to do with it; but in the afternoon when Mr. Perkins came in he told Mr. Mooers that he had received a letter from his partners by which he was "thrown out of the factory," and directed him to throw the part of the machine which he had taken out under the viceboard, and not to put the machine together again until he requested it. The machine was not put together again until five or six years afterward when Briggs R. Reed put it into operation during his brief stay at the factory.

The partnership continued only about three months, the dissolution occurring July 26, 1798. The notice of the dissolution says that it was mutually agreed to, but the preceding paragraph indicates that Mr. Perkins was controlled by the other partners, having little means to defend himself against them. He had conveyed to Armstrong his mill and his patents, and three months sufficed to rout the poor inventor.

By the terms of the dissolution Mr. Perkins was to remain at the factory; but disappointed he turned his attention to other inventions. In 1809, he invented the stereotype check plate for the prevention of counterfeit bank bills, and thus imposed an important obstacle in the frauds upon our currency, from which the community were daily suffering. Prosecutors said that they never heard of a good imitation of it; and a law was passed requiring all the Massachusetts banks to use it. During the war of 1812, he was employed in constructing machinery for boring out old honeycombed cannon, and in perfecting the science of gunnery. He discovered the method of softening and hardening steel, by which the process of engraving thereon was rendered easier. He demonstrated the compressibility of water, and, in connection with this discovery, invented the bathometer or piezometer to measure the depth of the sea by the pressure of water, and the pleometer to measure a ship's speed.

As Philadelphia was at that time the place most advanced in the arts and sciences he removed thither from Newburyport in 1816, and devoted himself to experiments on the power of steam, inventing a new method of generating it by suddenly letting a small quantity of water into a heated vessel. It is said that he succeeded in employing steam at a pressure of sixty-five atmospheres, or nine hundred and seventy-five pounds to the square inch.

He originated a plan for engraving bank notes on steel, and, in 1818, took it to London, England where he afterward resided. Though it did not find acceptance at once the plan ultimately proved a great success, and was carried out by Mr. Perkins and engraver Heath, as partners, during the rest of his long business life. In 1819, he patented in the United States a steam gun, which attracted the notice of the English government. And in 1824 he exhibited a trial of it before the Duke of Wellington. At a distance of thirty-five yards, the gun sent its balls through eleven planks, each an inch thick and placed an inch apart, and was capable of discharging one thousand balls a minute; but the danger attending the use of highly compressed steam prevented its adoption.

To the Transactions of the Royal Society, for June, 1826, Mr. Perkins furnished a paper "On the Progressive Compression of Water by high degrees of force, with some trials of its effects on other liquids."

A correspondent of the Salem Register wrote, in 1827, that this "celebrated man is now astonishing Europe by the resources of his great mind."

Mr. Perkins retired from business in 1834, and continued to live in London, where he died July 11, 1849, at the age of eighty-three, having received the well-earned title of "The American Inventor." Like most inventors and scientists he spent his life in the cause of science, and never acquired a fortune. The frontispiece, showing the portrait of Mr. Perkins is a slightly reduced reproduction of an engraving in the American Magazine (1839), volume 2, page 137.*

The Amesbury nail factory conducted a large business, the new nail machines enabling the owners to export great quantities of nails to foreign countries, and the American government having early protected the industry by an impost duty of one cent a pound on spikes and nails.

Guppy and Armstrong conveyed to Clifford Crowninshield, John Osgood and Samuel Gray, all of Salem, merchants, in 1801, the factory, land, and the patent granted to Mr. Perkins for nail machines for fourteen years from Dec. 20, 1794, and also a patent for improvements thereon granted to Mr. Perkins for fourteen years from Feb. 14, 1799. The importance of the invention of these nail machines is shown by the fact that between 1790 and 1825 one hundred and twenty patents were granted on them.

Messrs. Crowninshield, Osgood and Gray, conveyed the factory buildings, the corn mill, land under and adjoining the same, dam, water course, tools, machinery, patents, etc., to Abel Lawrence, gentleman, and William Ward, merchant, both of Salem, in trust for the partners in the Amesbury Nail Factory Company, for thirty-five hundred dollars, July 21, 1803.† These new owners had already taken possession of the factory, and were carrying on the business under the old name of Amesbury Nail Factory Company.

Jacob Rowell, jr., of Salisbury, Philip Jones of Amesbury, and Stephen Green of Kensington, N. H., yeomen, by authority of the Society of Friends, conveyed to Messrs. Lawrence and Ward in trust for the nail company, for four hundred dollars, the Quaker meeting-house and the quarter-acre lot of land on which it stood, adjoining the nail factory, bounded on the south "by the road leading from the Amesbury mills to the Lyon's mouth," on the northeast by a way belonging to the nail company, and on the northwest by land of David Morrill, Jan. 19, 1804*. This was the lot that was given by Thomas Barnard to the Friends to erect their meeting-house upon 1 : 2 mo : 1707.†

On the same day, Jan. 19, 1804, Messrs. Lawrence and Ward declared that they held the mills, the Quaker meeting-house, dwelling house, land, etc., in trust for the Amesbury Nail Factory Company, which had erected a rolling and splitting mill there.§

The company was incorporated March 16, 1805, for twenty-five years, the original corporators being William Gray, jr., esq., Samuel Gray, Clifford Crowninshield, John Jenks, William Ward, Abel Lawrence, Edward Southwick, William S. Gray, John Appleton, and George Dodge, merchants, and Samuel Putnam, esquire, most of them being residents of Salem.

The company were carrying on a flourishing business, when, at four o'clock in the morning of Dec. 24, 1805, by an accident, the factory was totally destroyed by fire, together with the grist-mill, two blacksmiths' shops, and three hundred cords of wood, the estimated loss being $80,000.

The factory was rebuilt, and the business was increased. The owners of eighty-two of the hundred shares of stock of the company were, in 1810, as follows: Samuel Gray and William Gray, sixteen each; John Jenks, eight; Samuel Putnam, six; John Appleton and W. Shepard Gray, four each; Thomas Perkins, three; George Dodge, Larkin Dodge, Jonathan Hodges, E. A. Holyoke, Theresa Orne, jr., John Cabot, Joshua Dodge, Lydia Cabot and Ebenezer Felton, two each; and John Prince, jr., Benjamin Dodge, Mehitable Dodge, John Ropes, Benjamin Pickman, L. Rawlins Pickman and Jonathan Allen, one each. John Prince, jr., was then clerk of the company.* In 1806, Samuel Putnam was clerk. In 1807, Ebenezer Felton of Salisbury was agent of the company, and the next year the agent was John Rollins of Newbury, merchant; Col. John Russell was agent at the factory when it was sold in 1825.

In 1807, the company bought some land at the mouth of Kimball's pond in Amesbury, where they had built sluice gates.† In 1810, they bought half an acre of land more there. This was and has since been the reservoir of the mills. In 1823, the company sold the property and water rights at the pond to the Amesbury Cotton Manufacturing Company, Amesbury Flannel Manufacturing Company, Amesbury Wool and Cotton Manufacturing Company, Salisbury Woolen Manufacturing Company, and several individuals.§

The business of the nail company was probably near its end at this time, and the buildings, land, machinery, water privileges, etc., were sold at auction, for twenty-one thousand dollars, to Pickering Dodge, esq., of Salem, July 13, 1825.¶ This property was situated on both sides of Powow river, and included twenty-eight of Perkins' nail machines, the rolling-mill that had lately been rebuilt, an island in the river, etc. The directors at this time were Pickering Dodge, Benjamin Dodge and Joshua Ward, jr.

The old nail factory was sold by Mr. Dodge to the Salisbury Woolen Manufacturing Company Oct. 18, 1825,¶¶ who converted it into a weaving room.

THE COMET.

The Comet! he is on his way,
And singing as he flies;
The whizzing planets shrink before
The spectre of the skies.

Ah, well may regal orbs turn blue,
And satellites turn pale,—
Ten million cubic miles of head!
Ten billion leagues of tail!

And what would happen to the land,
And happen to the sea,
If in the bearded devil's path
Our earth should chance to be?

O. W. H.

EARLY COMETS.

The first comet to appear in the heavens of New England, of which there is any account, blazed forth from Orion from the ninth to the twenty-second of December, 1652. It was large, and people shuddered when they looked at its beautiful tail of fire. Another appeared from February 3 to March 28, 1661.

The people connected their appearance with some famine, plague or disaster, either as its direct cause or precursor; and the learned men of the times taught the people to fear their approach. When it is considered that some persons are still disturbed at their coming in this very end of the nineteenth century, it is readily understood why the people of the days when superstition was fostered trembled at their appearance. They seemed to be the perfection of instruments to accomplish the burning of the world.

The clergy of New England sought to make the most of this belief and fear, either hypocritically, to simply increase the membership of their churches, or because they shared the common belief and honestly endeavored to have souls prepared for the great change that might come immediately, and without further warning. At these periods many were brought into the fold, and the ordinances and services of the church were more carefully observed.

In the mild winter of 1664-5, another comet appeared. "The great and dreadful comet," as Josselyn called it, was first seen on the eighth of November. Night after night, the whole winter through, "the great blazing starre" took its position in the southern sky as soon as the stars began to glint in the evening constellations. Its size and extreme brilliancy greatly alarmed the people. Morton said that it was "no fiery meteor caused by exhalation, but it appeared to be sent immediately by God to awake the secure world." Among the events which were believed to have been portended by this comet, according to a writer of the time, were "The great and dreadful plague in England the next summer, the dreadful war by sea with the Dutch, and the burning of London the second year following."

Probably the largest comet ever seen in New England by the English speaking race was the Newtonian comet of 1680. It was first seen at Boston at five o'clock on the morning of Nov. 14, 1680, appearing in the southeastern sky near fourteen degrees in libra and one degree and three minutes southward of the ecliptic. The sky being clear, it appeared at first plainly but in a few moments vanished as day was beginning to dawn. It appeared earlier and earlier in the morning until about December 8, when it could be seen in the evening. It continued to be visible till February 10, when it was beyond the reach of the naked eye. Five hundred and forty years being required to complete its circuit it will not be seen again here until the year 2225. Increase Mather gave a lecture on this comet, saying in his introduction, that "As for this blazing star, which hath occasioned this discourse, it was a terrible sight indeed, especially about the middle of December last, the stream of such a stupendous magnitude as that few men now living ever beheld the like." The governor and council of the Massachusetts Bay colony appointed a general fast, one reason assigned for it in the proclamation being "that awful, portentous, blazing star, usually foreboding some calamity to the beholder thereof," and the greatest strictness was observed by the people in keeping it.

THE OLD WEAVER.

In the low-ceiled ancient room,
 Silently, thoughtfully, sadly,
 Weaving the threads of warp and woof,
 The old weaver sits at his loom.
 To left, to right, the shuttle flies,
 And the web is thickly woven;—
 How steadily the pattern grows
 Under his ever watchful eyes!
 His day of weary labor past,
 The old man thinks, in life's great loom,
 From all his mingled joys and tears
 What pattern shall appear at last;
 Believing that he weaveth still Directed by the Father's will.

S. P.

EARLY WEAVING.

The ingenious looms of the present time were not in existence in the early days of our county's history. The Indians wove various articles from different substances; and the English settlers brought with them from the home-land the hand-loom. Until 1733, this was the only machine in use anywhere for this purpose. Below is a picture of the hand-loom of the seventeenth century.

HAND-LOOM.

The yarn or threads were first wound on numerous little bobbins, not shown in the cut, and then came the "warping." This consisted of the threads running lengthwise of the loom, their number depending upon the width of the web or article to be woven and their closeness. This was done in a "warping frame" made for that purpose; or, directly on the "beam" of the loom.

The treadles, by a simple device, raised every other one of the threads of the warp, and pulled down those remaining. Then the weaver took the shuttle in one of his hands and threw it through the warp where the threads were thus opened. The shuttle contained a bobbin on which had been wound the woof thread.

By a mechanical arrangement the woof thread was pressed against that which had next preceded it. The position of the warp threads was then reversed by the treadles, and the shuttle thrown through the warp in the opposite direction. These movements were repeated with every thread.

The process of hand weaving was slow, to be sure, though really faster than it seemed. In this tedious manner our forefathers turned their homespun threads into dress goods. The cloth was generally woven plain; the earliest variation found being the simplest, that is, stripes and plaids. Before the close of the eighteenth century weavers had become so accomplished in operating the hand-loom that they wrought fine, artistic articles, some of which are extant today, preserved by the descendants of those that produced them as specimens of the domestic handiwork of early days.

Cotton, woollen and linen were woven into cloth, either alone or in combination with each other. Cotton and wool were sometimes woven together, as they are still. Linen and wool were also united, forming the "linsey-woolsey" of those days. Until the Revolution cotton was not used as extensively as wool and linen. Linen was much used in the manufacture of table and bed linen as well as for apparel.

Besides cloth for apparel and table and bed linen, sail cloth, bed ticking and handkerchiefs were woven.

The weaving was done so thoroughly that the "homespun" of our fathers seemed almost imperishable.

Only the wealthier and larger families owned looms; and they were generally operated by their own members. The looms were often used, however, by the professional weaver, who travelled about the region periodically, semi-annually or annually, in spring or fall, or both. Such weavers boarded and lodged with the family for whom they were weaving until they had made all the cloth necessary for the use of the family for the next six months or year. They would then move on to the family to whom they were next engaged. Happy their advent! for they were bearers of news and gossip, which were then greatly relished because of the difficulty of their acquirement in the days before newspapers became common, and social intercourse was limited.

Another class of professional weavers were those that owned looms and operated them at their own homes, the material being brought to them. These probably constituted the larger class of weavers. Some of them in later times owned several looms and hired help in weaving.

BANCROFT IMMIGRANTS.

BY MARY A. PARSONS.

Farmer, followed by Savage, gives Lt. Thomas Bancroft as son of John Bancroft, who came over in the James in 1632. The following relates to the passengers on board the James. "The names of such men, women and children wch are to passe to New England to be resident there upon a plantation have tendered and taken the oath of allegiance according to y^e Stattute." In the list are the names of John and Jane Barcroft. Both Barcroft and Bancroft are names common in England, and the name is spelled both ways.

John Bancroft was of Lynn, and died, it would seem, in 1637. Newhall, in his history of Lynn, mentions among the newcomers in 1640, "Thomas Bancroft (Lieut.)," and adds "son of widow Bancroft." This may have been an inference only, derived from Farmer.

In 1638 the widow Bancroft received a grant from the town of Lynn of one hundred acres of land, but no other record has been found of the title being in her name. On the other hand Thomas

Bancroft was found living on a hired farm near Lynn End (now Lynnfield) in 1655, or thereabouts, while at various periods deeds show that he bought land, particularly a farm of sixty acres "near Beaver Dam," in that part of Lynn which is now Lynnfield, in 1670.

If his mother had received a grant of land would there not be some evidence of his sharing it, instead of this negative evidence of his having no part or parcel in her property?

This farm of sixty acres was bounded on the northeast by Isaac Hart's land; and land of Mr. Holyoke is mentioned as contiguous to it.

An original deed in the possession of a descendant, dated 1673, shows that Isaac Hart bought the five hundred acres granted by the town of Lynn to Mr. Thomas Willis, and the name "Willis meadow" remains with us to this day. This opens the interesting question as to whether some of the grants of 1638 might not have remained unplaced till after Lynn End was given in 1639, for the names of Mr. Thomas Willis, Mr. Holyoke and Henry Collins, who also owned land in Lynn End, all occur on the first page of the old book recording the grants from which Mr. Newhall copies in his History of Lynn (page 171).

The name of Thomas Bancroft appears in Dedham, Mass., records in 1647, when he was married. One authority, Allen, states that he came to Dedham in 1640. In 1648, he was admitted townsman. In 1652, he removed to Reading, as records show, and afterwards to Lynn End, where he died in 1691.

But what became of the widow Bancroft of Lynn?

We find at Southampton, L. I., upon the records, Nov. 19, 1644, a petition presented "for the quiet and peaceable enjoyment of the lot betwixt them which formerly was granted unto widow Bancroft was granted and consented unto," etc., closing with the words "three years after the tyme y^t was by the sayd widdow Bancroft given unto them."

Was the above equivalent of the one hundred acre grant at Lynn? Did the town of Lynn have the right to make such a grant in Long Island? Undoubtedly numbers of persons did go thither from Lynn. From the Documentary History of New York we find this relating to the town of East Hampton, L. I.: "It is very evident from the records that some of the original thirty-five settlers and purchasers removed from Lynn in Massachusetts; and tradition informs us they came from several of the towns on the sea coast to the eastward of Boston."

Gov. Winthrop in his Journal, and Gov. Hutchinson in his History of Massachusetts (page 88), mention that, in 1640, a number of families removed from Lynn to the west end of Long Island, and bought land, etc., "but getting into some quarrel with the Dutch they removed to the east end, and settled at Southampton."

It is claimed therefore that the "widow Bancroft" was the widow of John of Lynn, and that John, Thomas and Anna Bancroft of the Connecticut river towns of Windsor and Enfield were probably her children, for they have been shown to be brothers and sister.

The sister of Hon. George Bancroft, the historian, was the wife of John Davis, governor and United States senator. The ancestry of this couple was compiled by their son Horace Davis, member of congress. He gives the earliest New England ancestor of his mother thus: "Lt. Thomas Bancroft of Reading, immigrant; born about 1622; perhaps the Thomas Bancroft mentioned in records of Cheadle, England, as baptised 10 Feb., 1622."

Savage and others identify him with Thomas, son of John and Jane Barcroft of Lynn, 1632-1638, but there is no evidence of such connection, on the contrary there is reason to think the Lynn Barcrofts were another family, and emigrated to Connecticut before 1648."

Additional testimony exists in the fact that two versions of the beginning in New England of the family give Thomas as the founder. One, and perhaps both of these show evidence of considerable age. In one, data are given as if 1776 was the time of writing.

In Wyman's "Genealogy and Estates of Charlestown" there is a reference to "Thomas Bancroft of Dedham, Reading and Lynnfield."

Thomas Bancroft, a native of Swarkestone on the Trent, Derbyshire, who printed in London a volume of epigrams in 1639, says of his brother John Bancroft:—

"You sold your land the lighter thence to go
To foreign coasts yet (fate would have it so) Did ne'er New England reach, but went with them
That journey toward New Jerusalem."

As this is supposed to be poetry we must make allowance for poetic license; still, it is rather a stretch to say this of a brother who had lived five years on the "foreign coasts."

May this John possibly have been the father of John of Lynn, Roger of Cambridge, and Thomas of Dedham?*

SETTLEMENT OF TOPSFIELD.

The following are two votes of the general court in reference to the settlement of Topsfield:—

ABBOT NOTES.

Hannah Chandler was of Roxbury and not of Andover at the time of her marriage with George Abbot¹ (page 35, volume I).

The "old red house," frontispiece of the March (1897) number, was built by John Abbott², and not by Timothy Abbott as stated on page 37. John's² son John³ added to it. This "old red house" was near the South church. The garrison house of Timothy Abbott was on the top of the hill near the present residence of his descendants, and it was taken down many years ago, probably in the third generation. The sight was across the street from the present residence of S. H. Bailey, whose wife is a lineal descendant and heir to the estate. There is some reason to believe that a garrison house with additions is still standing at the foot of the hill on an estate bought by Philemon Chandler in the third generation, and if not one of the garrisons of the Ballard family may turn out to be the first house built by Timothy Abbott, who moved up the hill to the estate purchased from his brother William's heirs before their removal to Connecticut.

Hannah Abbott³ (No. 42, page 36), who married Abiel Holt, is said to have died in Windham Feb. 11, 1751; and he married, secondly, the next year, Sara Downer, who died in Wellington, Conn., in 1784.

Sarah Abbot³ (No. 69, page 37) was born on the fifteenth of some month late in 1701; and her sister Elizabeth Feb. 1, 1714.

Mary Abbott⁴ (No. 105, page 39) married, first in 1742, Joseph Chandler, who died in 1745, and she was published to Isaac Blunt the next year.

Zerviah, wife of Jonathan Abbot³ (No. 46, page 41), died in 1768, at the age of eighty.

Nathan Abbot⁴ (No. 182, page 41) adopted his nephew Nathan Abbot⁵ (No. 391), who succeeded to the estate, it now being owned by Mr. Witham from Marblehead.

Isaac Abbot⁴ (No. 107, page 62) had a daughter Olive baptized July 9, 1758.

Jeremiah, Amos and Joshua, three of the sons of Dea. Nathan Abbot⁵ (No. 391, page 98), removed to Dexter, Me. They engaged in the manufacture of woollens very early in history of such business in America, and in Dexter founded the firm now known as Amos Abbott & Co., famed for honest work of high grade. Their plant is probably the oldest mill in this country remaining in the same family for successive generations.

Capt. Abel Abbott⁶ (No. 555) married first, Sarah Abbott; and, second, Mary Jones. Jeremiah (No. 557) married Lucy Safford. Amos (No. 559) married Mehitable Safford. Joshua (No. 561) married, first, Lydia Abbott; and, second, Mary Baker. The first wives of Abel, Paschal and Joshua were sisters, and first cousins of their husbands. Sarah Abbott⁶ (No. 558) married Abiel Russell, brother of her brother Nathan's wife. Lydia Abbott⁶ (No. 562) married Dea. Thomas Kendall of Skowhegan, Me., and Tewksbury, Mass.

Caleb Abbot⁵ (No. 427, page 100) married Debora, daughter of Nathan Ames of Groton, and widow of Henry Gray Baker of Andover. Their daughter Clarissa married Rev. Ebenezer Poor of the Home Mission field, and survives him with her mental faculties in full vigor at the age of ninety-four, residing in Andover.

—C. H. Abbott, Andover.

Nehemiah Abbot³ (No. 16, page 104) had a daughter Elizabeth baptized Dec. 22, 1695. His daughter Mary was baptized Nov. 5, 1693.

Nehemiah Abbot (No. 35, page 105)* was married May 18, 1744, and his daughter Elizabeth was baptized May 19, 1745.

Dea. John Abbot⁴ (No. 38, page 105)* had other children than those given, who were baptized as follows: Mercy, April 19, 1719; Jacob, Aug. 28, 1720; Abigail, March 18, 1722; Nehemiah, March (29?) 1724; Elizabeth, Nov. 10, 1728; Martha, Feb. 14, 1731.

*This Nehemiah was probably son of John⁴ baptized as above March (29?), 1724; and the Johns,⁴ Nos. 34 and 38, are probably the same, John's date of death being perhaps Nehemiah's (No. 35).

—Topsfield church records.

Abigail Abbot (No. 72, page 105) lived in Linebrook parish, and while teaching school in Byfield died very suddenly July 1, 1781, aged twenty-six, and was buried at Linebrook.—Byfield church records.

David Abbot of Topsfield baptized in 1727.

Ann Abbott, daughter of Jacob, baptized March 1, 1718-9.

ANSWERS.

34. The querist is evidently mistaken in his statement that Hannah Peabody married Daniel Andrew of Salem Feb. 12, 1701-2. It was Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. John Peabody of Boxford, that married Daniel Andrew on that date.—
Ed.

118. Samuel Bradford, who married Mary Taylor in Middleton in 1743, was grandson of William Bradford of Beverly. William's father was probably Robert Bradford,¹ who was born about 1626, and lived in Beverly, where he died Jan. 13, 1706. He was a farmer of some means, and probably removed hither from Boston about 1668. He was living in Beverly in 1670. He was undoubtedly father of William Bradford,² who was born about 1640. William² lived in Beverly; married Rachel, daughter of John Rayment of that town, Nov. 14, 1676; and died there June 15, 1717. His estate was quite small. Among their children was a son William,³ born in Beverly in 1686, being baptized Oct. 3, of that year; who was at first a weaver, then a seaman, and on removing to Boxford again took up weaving. He lived in Beverly until 1721, when he removed to Boxford, and from thence, in 1743, to Middleton, where he died in 1760 or 1761. He married Grace, daughter of Andrew Elliott of Beverly, Dec. 23, 1707. Among their children was Samuel Bradford,⁴ born in Beverly in 1720, being baptized May 8, of that year. Samuel⁴ was a housewright, and was living in Middleton as late as 1761. He is the subject of this query.—

No. 7.

CENTRE OF GEORGETOWN IN THE YEAR 1800.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

THE frontispiece is a map of the centre of the West parish of Rowley, or New Rowley (now Georgetown), in 1800. It includes the territory measuring a mile and thirty rods in length and two hundred and twenty-five rods in width, and is drawn on a scale of fifty rods to an inch, being based on actual surveys and title deeds. It shows Andover street to a point about five rods beyond the Noyes house; West Main street to the Crosby house; North street to Summer street; Main street to the eastern end of Union cemetery; and Elm street to Chestnut street. It shows the location of the cemetery, church, schoolhouse, and all the houses standing in 1800.

On North street, the ditch at the blacksmith shop of Charles Holmes was the eastern boundary of the David Tenney house lot, the northerly boundary being the line between the estates of George H. Carleton and the late Daniel E. Moulton on West Main street. The dividing line between the estates of Capt. Benjamin Adams and William Dole is now within the railroad location. The line between the lots of William Dole and David Tenney is the present boundary between the estates of Orlando B. Tenney and William Kendall. The line shown on the map between the lots of David Tenney and Samuel Burbank is the present line between the brick schoolhouse lot and the Noyes shoe-factory building. The line bounding the rear of the three lots last mentioned runs from the southwestern side of the yard of the First church. The line dividing John Brocklebank's and

The dotted parallel lines crossing Andover street shows the location of an old proprietor's road, running between ranges of lots in the three thousand acres.

Burying ground. The burying ground was only the eastern end of the present Union cemetery. This land belonged to Joseph Nelson, and when his wife died, June 5, 1732, he buried her body on this southern slope instead of carrying the remains to Byfield. Some other bodies were subsequently interred here, and, Feb. 27, 1733-4, Mr. Nelson conveyed to the "West parish of Rowley," for two pounds and ten shillings, the lot shown on the map, being "One quarter of an Acre of Land for a burying place which land is Scituate in y^e Township of Rowley afores^d and Near y^e Meeting in s^d parish which land includes the graves of those already buried in s^d parish and is bounded as followeth (viz^t) ten rods upon y^e Road or highway this being y^e Northerly bound then bounded Easterly and Westerly four rods and Southerly ten Rods by y^e Land Remaineing in my possefsion."

Gage, in his History of Rowley, says that the yard was enlarged by purchase of land from Rev. Moses Hale, in 1755, but there is no record of the transfer in the registry of deeds. Moses Hale, jr., gentleman, owned the adjoining land at that time, to be sure, but he was not the clergyman of that name. An addition of half an acre was made on the western end, however, Dec. 5, 1805, by purchase.

Job Brocklebank house. This house is still standing. It was owned by Ebenezer Boynton, husbandman, March 25, 1726, when he sold the house and other buildings and thirty-seven and one-half acres of land to Jonathan Bradstreet of Rowley, husbandman, for three hundred and fifty pounds. Captain Bradstreet conveyed the farm to John Spofford of Rowley, gentleman, March 21, 1739, for a thousand pounds. Mr. Spofford sold out to Joseph Nelson, who conveyed the place to Moses Hale, jr., of Newbury, gentleman, for two hundred and forty pounds, Aug. 12, 1743. Mr. Hale lived on the farm until his death, in 1776. He probably removed here because he was brother to Mrs. Chandler, wife of the pastor of the church, who lived adjoining. June 20, 1785, Nathaniel Hale and Joseph Hale of Newbury, probably heirs of the late owner of the farm, conveyed the house, barn and land to John Tenney of Rowley, cordwainer, for three hundred and fifty pounds. Mr. Tenney sold out to Job Brocklebank April 2, 1799; and the place has since remained in the Brocklebank family.

Meeting house. Capt. Jonathan Bradstreet was owner of the farm above mentioned in 1732, when he conveyed to the parish the southwest corner of it (at the *) for the site of the first meeting-house in the parish, it having been built there and raised June 5, 1729. The residence of David Brocklebank now occupies the site. The lot was so small that horse sheds were built upon Captain Bradstreet's adjoining land; and when the parish schoolhouse was built in 1739 it occupied a corner of the homestead adjoining the church. The horse sheds and schoolhouse were standing there in 1743, and were excepted in the deed of the farm from Nelson to Hale. At the time of the erection of the meeting-house Richard Boynton was living in the rear of this farm on the Long Hill road, and Captain Bradstreet gave him and other families living on that road the privilege to cross his land to meeting. This was done by laying out the lane that now exists there. The meeting-house occupied this site until 1769, when the old South meeting-house was erected at the junction of the roads as shown on the map. May 24, 1768, Solomon Nelson signed a deed to the Second parish of the triangular lot of land where the meeting-house was subsequently erected for its site and for a road and training field. The deed was never acknowledged or recorded. May 3, 1800, he gave a new deed of the same. In this he also conveyed to the parish land sufficient to make the curve of the street where the Catholic church stands. The meeting-house was raised July 5, 1769, and occupied the site for upwards of a hundred years. The cut shows the meeting-house as it appeared originally; great wings being added on each side about fifty-five years ago.

Solomon Nelson house. This house stood on the site of the house lately owned and occupied by Humphrey Nelson, and was the parsonage. Francis Brocklebank conveyed the farm of twenty-seven acres with a house thereon to Rev. James Chandler, the first pastor of the church, for one hundred and ninety pounds, July 31, 1732. The next year, Mr. Chandler erected a new house and barn upon the place. He died in 1789, devising the farm to the parish; and the parish committee conveyed it to Solomon Nelson Feb. 3, 1790. Mr. Nelson lived here, and died Oct. 1, 1821. He was succeeded by his son Stephen Mighill Nelson. April 4, 1825, the house was destroyed by fire; and the owner immediately erected the present house upon the same site.

NATHANIEL NELSON HOUSE.

Nathaniel Nelson house. Nathaniel Nelson was in possession of this house and lot in 1800, probably having been given to him by his father Solomon Nelson. The cut shows the house as it now appears.

PAUL NELSON HOUSE.

Paul Nelson house. This is the residence of M. G. Spofford, the cut showing it as it now appears. It was owned by Dudley Tyler July 5, 1765, when he conveyed it, with barn and twenty acres of land, to Solomon Nelson (who had been living in Andover), a tailor, for one hundred and sixty pounds. Solomon Nelson, jr., was an innholder here in 1773. In 1800, this property was called Solomon's son Paul's, though his father did not deed it to him until July 17, 1811. In the last named deed was included a small lot of land where the Catholic church stands; and there Paul had a store.

JOHN PILSBURY HOUSE.

John Pilsbury house. William Perley of Rowley, cordwainer, conveyed this farm of fifty-seven and three-quarters acres of land and house and barn to John Pilsbury (who was living in the David Tenney house), blacksmith, April 7, 1795, for four hundred and sixty-one pounds and nineteen shillings. Mr. Pilsbury died in 1797; and his heirs sold twenty-two acres off the western corner of the farm, with the buildings, to Asa Bradstreet of Rowley, blacksmith, Jan. 2, 1819, for nineteen hundred and fifty dollars. On June 2, 1824, Mr. Bradstreet sold the place, with all the buildings except the blacksmith shop, to John B. Savory, who instituted a tavern there. The engraving shows the house as it originally appeared. It stood in front of the Pentucket house, fronting on the square. When the tavern was established the old house was moved back and turned around with the back toward North street, and the present front portion of the Pentucket was added to it, the old house forming an L. Thus it has since remained.

David Tenney house. Jonathan Harri- man, jr., of Rowley, yeoman, for one hundred and ninety pounds, conveyed to John Pilsbury of Rowley, blacksmith, this house and other buildings and the lot April 17, 1783. Mr. Pilsbury carried on the trade of a blacksmith here for a number of years, and then sold the place, with the house, barn, etc., for one hundred and sixty-five pounds, to David Tenney of

DAVID TENNEY HOUSE.

Rowley, shoemaker, April 6, 1795. The next day Mr. Pilsbury purchased the Perley place across the street, as above stated, and removed thither, pursuing his trade in a shop there. This house was moved, in 1872, about a quarter of a mile up the street, and is now the house occupied by the family of the late Charles L. Smith. The engraving shows it as it appeared just before its removal. The old site is now occupied by the store of Dennis Donoghue.

William Dole house. This is the house occupied by Mrs. Stephen S. Dow near the railroad crossing. Amos Jewett of Rowley, for one hundred and seventy-five pounds, conveyed this house, barn and lot to William Dole of Rowley Nov. 30, 1793. Mr. Dole removed to Haverhill, where he was a chaise maker, and Jan. 2, 1804, conveyed the premises to John Brown of Rowley, yeoman. Mr. Brown sold it to Paul Stickney of Rowley Dec. 9, 1806, together with the privilege of using the well which was situated on the lot on the opposite side of the road which he had, on the day of his purchase, sold to David Tenney. The place subsequently came into the possession of Samuel Brocklebank, who lived here. He conveyed it, April 1, 1865, to his daughter Mrs. Betsey E. Dow, who still lives in the house. She then moved it round front to the street, changed the roof from a gambrel to a pitch roof, and took down the old chimney, erecting two new ones. The cut shows the house as it originally appeared, corner to the street, with its gambrel roof.

Samuel Burbank house. Before 1768, an old house stood in West Main street, facing Central street, the west end occupying that portion of the site of the present Phoenix building as is included in the town clerk's office. Eleazer Burbank, yeoman, owned it, and was living here March 1, 1768, when, for forty pounds, he conveyed the house, barn and lot to his son Samuel Burbank. Samuel was a carpenter, and immediately after his purchase took the house down, and erected a new one on the same site, the next year. Mr. Burbank died Feb. 4, 1777; and for many years his widow Mehitable occupied a part of the house as her right of dower. In 1832, she leased it to Joseph Little, Henry Pettingill's and William H. Spofford's shops being then standing upon a part of the lot, which was excepted in the lease. During the last days of its existence, on the eastern half of the front of the house an addition had been built, in which Robert McQuestion conducted a store. Soon afterward Mr. Little took the house down and used much of the lumber in the erection of the Phoenix building. The pump at the corner of the Phoenix building is in the old well which in the early days occupied a position in the front yard, but which in the change of street lines has been brought into the street.

John Brocklebank (Clark) house. This house stood where the late T. G. Elliot resided, Main street being at its back and the front of the house facing Library street. John Brocklebank owned it in 1800, and sold the house and the whole lot of land as shown on the map to Daniel Clark, cordwainer, for five hundred dollars, March 17, 1803. Library street was then a corduroy road that Mr. Brocklebank had made across his swamp. In 1844, the house was moved to the corner of Central and Library streets, where it is now known as the Morgan house. A year later, Mr. Clark sold a quarter of an acre off the southeastern corner of this lot to Enoch Dresser of Rowley for the site of his house which he built immediately.

Centre Schoolhouse. The old Centre schoolhouse stood where the soldier's monument stands, the schoolhouse lot running back to the present house lot of John Hale. The house was about twenty-five feet wide and thirty long, facing the south; and because it was painted the old fashioned red color it became known as the old red schoolhouse. During the last years of its existence it was not used for a public school. Occasionally a private school occupied it awhile; and religious services were often held there, entertainments and lectures also being given. It finally went to ruin, and was taken down in 1840.

John Brocklebank house. In 1800, what is now Central street was a lane leading past John Brocklebank's house to Asa Chaplin's. It became a town road about 1810. Dea. Samuel Brocklebank conveyed to his son John Brocklebank this part of his farm and the buildings April 7, 1714; and John resided here. It descended from John to John, who conveyed the buildings and land to his son John May 9, 1815; and, Aug. 15, 1832, the son conveyed the estate to Joseph Little. The ancient house came into the possession of Mrs. George W. Boynton,

Benjamin Wallingford house. Benjamin Wallingford owned and lived in this house in 1800. He died in 1805, and his heirs sold the estate to Nathaniel Nelson March 5, 1819. The house was taken down in 1838; and that of Mr. Picket was erected upon the same site. In the latter years of its existence the front door was on the opposite side of the house in the field.

Benjamin Adams house. This house stood in what is now the southern end of Nelson avenue, and was twenty-five feet long and twenty wide. This farm was the range of lots in the three thousand acres known by the letter G, containing thirteen lots in all, and running from the Andover road to Rock pond. These lots were bought of the various owners by Capt.

Abraham Adams of Newbury from 1721 to 1723; and, Aug. 27, 1740, he conveyed them to his son William Adams, who erected this house, in which he resided. William Adams died in the winter of 1765-6. The farm came into the possession of the deceased's son-in-law Benjamin Adams of Newbury, and he came here and lived. The house was destroyed by fire in 1800, and Mr. Adams removed to New London, N. H. Nov.

BENJAMIN ADAMS HOUSE.

29, 1800, he conveyed the place to Nathaniel Nelson, whose descendants have occupied the premises ever since.

Moses Boynton house. How old this house is has not been determined. Richard Boynton may have lived in it. He died on Christmas day, 1732; and his son Nathan Boynton was the next occupant. He died April 25, 1766; and the estate descended to his son Moses Boynton.

MOSES BOYNTON HOUSE.

ton. Moses spent his entire life upon this farm. After his death, which occurred Jan. 19, 1823, the house was occupied by his family for many years. The illustration shows the house as it now appears.

THE SMUGGLERS.

In the old provincial days,
Before the Revolution,
Yankees smuggled in the goods
That came across the ocean.

They broke the laws of England,
Claiming freedom from the crown,
And punished most severely
The informers in each town.

We glory in the rebels
And the conflicts with their foes,
And stretch every nerve to prove
That their blood within us flows.

INFORMERS OF SMUGGLERS.

For several years before the American Revolution actually burst into open war, the provincials were ill-disposed to allow English goods to enter our ports, paying the heavy duties which parliament exacted from the colonists. This led to much popular smuggling.

Two cases in which information of such illegal entry was given to the British custom officers have come to the notice of the writer in the files of the Essex Gazette, the only local newspaper of the time. The year was 1768. The first relates to Salem, and the account is as follows:—

SALEM, September 13. One Row, a Custom-House Waiter, on Wednesday last, by informing an Officer of the Customs that some Measures were taken on board a Vessel in this Harbour, to elude the Payment of certain Duties, engaged the Attention of a Number of the Inhabitants, who determined to distinguish him, in a conspicuous Manner, for his Conduct in this Service. Between the Hours of Ten and Eleven, A. M. he was taken from one of the Wharves, and conducted to the Common, where his Head, Body and Limbs were covered with warm Tar, and then a large Quantity of Feathers were applied to all Parts, which, by closely adhering to the Tar, exhibited an odd Figure, the Drollery of which can easily be imagined.—The poor Waiter was then exalted to a Seat on the Front of a Cart, and in this Manner led into the main Street, where a Paper, with the Word Informers thereon, in large Letters, was affixed to his Breast, and another Paper, with the same Word, to his Back. This Scene drew together, within a few Minutes, several Hundred People, who proceeded, with Huzzas and loud Acclamations, through the Town; and when arrived at the Bounds of the compact Part, opened to the Right and Left, when the Waiter, the confused Object of their Ridicule, descended from his Seat, walked through the Crowd, and having received the strongest Assurances that he should, the next Time he came to this Place, receive higher Marks of Distinction than those which were now conferred upon him, went immediately out of Town.

We hear, that the above-mentioned Row went directly to Boston, and having laid an Account of his Conduct and Treatment before a certain Board, was amply rewarded for his Faithfulness.*

The second incident relates to Newburyport. A Frenchman, named Francis Magno, gave notice of a smuggling vessel to the officers of the customs at Portsmouth, and this so enraged the people of Newburyport that when he arrived there he was seized, together with a citizen of Newbury, who was with him about the time the information was given, and both were tarred and feathered. The following were the accounts given of it in the contemporary Essex Gazette:—

SALEM, September 20.

We hear that on last Saturday fe'nnight two Informers, an Englishman and Frenchman, were taken up by the Populace at Newbury-Port, who tarred them and feathered them; but being late they were hand-cuffed and put into custody until the Sabbath was over: Accordingly, on Monday Morning, they were again tarred and rolled in Feathers, then fixed in a Cart with Halters, and carried through the principal Streets of the Town, to the View of the Gallows, but what further we do not hear.*

SALEM, September 27.

In the last Papers it was mentioned that an Englishman and a Frenchman had been ill used at Newbury-Port for making Information against a Vessel there: Since which the Englishman has complained to Authority of his ill-Treatment, at the same Time cleared himself by the Deposition as under, besides some Evidences that may hereafter appear.

Joshua Vickery of Newbury, Ship-Carpenter, declares in Substance as follows, viz.:

That on Saturday the tenth of September current, he was in a riotous Manner assaulted in the King's High-Way in Newbury-Port, seized and carried by Force to the public Stocks in the said Town, where he sat from three to five o'Clock in the Afternoon, most of the Time on the sharpest Stone that could be found, which put him to extreme Pain, so that he once fainted:—That he was afterwards taken out of the Stocks, put into a Cart and carried thro' the Town with a Rope about his Neck, his Hands tied behind him until the Dusk of the Evening, during which Time he was feverely pelted with Eggs, Gravel and Stones, and was much wounded thereby; he was then taken out of the Cart, carried into a dark Warehouse, and hand-cuffed with Irons, without Bed or Clothing, and in a Room where he could not lay strait, but made the Edge of a Tar-Pot, serve for a Pillow, so that when he arose the Hair was tore from his Head; he was confined to this Place the whole of the Lord's Day, with a Guard that prevented any of his Friends visiting him, excepting his Wife, who with Difficulty obtained Liberty to speak to him:---On Monday the 12th in the Forenoon he was taken out, and the Rioters upon their being well satisfied of his being innocent of what was laid to his Charge, compelled him only to lead a Horse Cart about the Town, with Francis Magno therein, who was stripped naked, tarred, and then committed to Gaol for Breach of the Peace.

* Essex Gazette, Sept. 13, 1768.

* Essex Gazette, Sept. 13-20, 1768.

ESSEX, ff, September 12, 1768.

THEN Joithua Vickery of Newbury, personally appeared before me the Subscriber and made solemn Oath, that he never did directly or indirectly make or give any Information to any Officer of the Customs nor to any other Person either against Capt. John Emmery, or any other Man whoever; that he was no ways concerned with Francis Magno in his Information, nor ever wrote one Line for the said Francis, on that Account, nor ever knew of the said Information until Saturday last. Sworn by me

JOHN BROWN, Just. Pacis.

The Suspicion that Vickery was concerned in the Information arose from his going to Portsmouth on some Business, and took the Frenchman with him, the said Frenchman seeing the vessel coming into Harbour, and having had a previous Difference with the Master or Owner, gave Information when he go[t] to Portsmouth.--- He declared repeatedly, that Mr. Vickery was not concerned with him in the information.*

The following news-item of a few weeks later shows more fully the feeling between the authorities and colonists:—

We hear from Marblehead, that last Saturday Capt. Grandy arrived there, after a tedious Passage, from Lisbon; having met with a Misfortune, was obliged to put into Halifax to water; the Vessel had scarcely anchored, but was boarded by the Officer of the Customs, who carried the Vessel to a Wharf, and, after having trenched and spitted his Salt, searched the Cheits, &c. Finding nothing to condemn the Vessel, tampered with the Sailors; and used the Master very scurrilously, by threatening to imprison him, and lay him under Bonds, altho' he had no contraband Goods on board; and when after a Detention of two Days, the Master demanded his Vessel, they threatened to unload her; but finding their Threats had no Effect, endeavoured to persuade him to leave his Vessel; which when they could not prevail on him to do, delivered her to him.---- These Circumstances sufficiently shew, not only the infamous Arts used to distress the fair Trader, but the base Dispositions of a Set of hungry Miscreants, whose only Aim seems to be to enrich themselves, by distressing honest Trade, under Pretence of securing the Revenue; such Instances of Oppression, tho' countenanc'd by those in Office, ought, however, to be made public, and the Actors in such dirty Scenes treated with the Contempt they deserve from every honest Man.*

THE DEPARTED INN.

No longer the host hobbles down from his rest
 In the porch's cool shadow to welcome his guest,
 With a smile of delight, and a grasp of the hand,
 And a glance of the eye that no heart could withstand.

When the long rains of autumn set in from the west
 The mirth of the landlord was broadest and best,
 And the stranger who paused, over night, never knew
 If the clock on the mantel struck ten or struck two.

Oh, the songs they would sing, and the tales
 they would spin,
 As they lounged in the light of the old-fashioned inn.

But a day came at last when the stage brought no load

To the gate, as it rolled up the long, dusty road.

J. N. Matthews.

FOUNTAIN INN, MARBLEHEAD.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

The frontispiece shows the site of the ancient hostelry known as the Fountain Inn, as seen from the water. The house stood in the rear of the fence shown in the centre of the engraving upon a bluff formed by a ledge. Some ninety feet in the rear of the fence another ledge rises almost perpendicularly as high as the house. On this narrow space, now principally green sward, was the house, garden and well. The well is still in use, and visitors can slake their thirst, if they will, from the same depths that travellers of early times were so eager to draw from.

This lot may have been a part of the land of Rev. William Walton, the first minister of the settlement, whose house was near on Pond street, and whose meeting-house stood in the old cemetery nearly where the mariners' monument occupies its commanding site. This little meeting-house was an object by which the hardy mariners of Marblehead steered their craft from far out to sea into Little Harbor as this cove has been called from the first settlement of the town. This was the harbor that was principally used in the early days, and here was the centre of the town, though afterward known as the north part, the land farther north remaining common until a recent date.

William Bartlett, sen., of Marblehead, yeoman and fisherman, and his wife Sarah, conveyed to their son Nathaniel Bartlett of Marblehead, mariner and innholder, Jan. 7, 1720-1, "a small piece of land where his cellar now is in our orchard before our mansion house at Little Harbor."* Aug. 22, 1723, Nathaniel Bartlett, sen., of Marblehead, shoreman, executor of the will of his uncle Nathaniel Walton, late of Marblehead, deceased, conveyed to his cousin Nathaniel Bartlett, jr., of Marblehead, mariner and innholder, a piece of land on which the deceased's barn and cow-house formerly stood, where the grantee "hath set up a new house."† This was probably the house that became the Fountain Inn.

Nathaniel Bartlett died here, while conducting the tavern, in 1749. His widow Jane married, secondly, a Mr. Jackson, and, Dec. 12, 1750, there was assigned to her, as dower, "the South Easterly end of the Fountain Tavern so called at the north end of the Town with a small piece of Garden of about one pole in breadth lying on the Westerly side of Thomas Bartlets Land there and all the Land lying at the Southeast end of the s^d House the whole breadth thereof, with the North-Easterly end of the wood house extending to the middle thereof, (Reserving to ly in Common for the free and equal use of all parties concerned, the well belonging to the Homestead, and all the land now lying on the South west of the House at the north end, and all Entry & stareways from the Cellar to the Garret and a passage way through the outer Celler Doors and from thence to all parts of the Celler)."

Feb. 9, 1750-1, the remainder of the estate was divided among the heirs, Nathaniel Bartlett of Marblehead, innholder, Mary, wife of Andrew Tucker of Marblehead, mariner, and widow Sarah Prebble. To Sarah Prebble was assigned the northwesterly end of the Fountain Tavern, so called, situate near Little Harbor, at the northerly end of the town, with the chamber over the entry way with the land there, exclusive of that assigned to the widow, with the easterly part of the tavern.*

March 20, 1750-1, Mrs. Prebble conveyed this part of the premises to Nathaniel Bartlett.†

In 1756, the estate of John Riddan recovered a judgment against the estate of Nathaniel Bartlett, jr., and the whole of the premises (his northwesterly half of the Fountain Inn and his interest in the south-easterly portion). Samuel Rogers was then occupying the premises, his wife being the administratrix of Nathaniel Bartlett's estate. The premises were set off to the Riddan estate in satisfaction of the execution Feb. 9, 1757.§

Oct. 26, 1789, Joseph Hinckley of Marblehead, merchant, and his wife Deborah|| conveyed to Capt. John Patten of Marblehead, mariner, their interest in the Fountain garden and the land thereto adjoining on which the house called the Fountain tavern formerly stood, except a small part thereof, claimed by Mrs. Rogers and others, being bounded in the whole northwesterly by land of Robert Girdler and others, northeasterly by land of John Pedrick, esq., deceased, southeasterly by Little harbor, and southwest by a highway.‡ Widow Deborah Bourn of Marblehead conveyed her interest in the estate to Captain Patten Jan. 8, 1792.¶

It appears, therefore, by these instruments that the old tavern was standing in 1757, and was gone before 1789.

The property passed from the Patten estate into the hands of Joshua O. Bowden May 3, 1828;  and in the family of Mr. Bowden the title and possession has since remained.

Pirates still infested the ocean when this old hostelry was in its prime. The people of the village were simple-minded and hospitable, receiving all that came with the same cordiality and with a generosity far beyond their ability. To this isolated fishing port the rovers of the seas sometimes came and lavishly spent their ill-gotten gold.

Here John Quelch, the pirate, took refuge, and with four of his associates was executed at Boston in 1704.

Smugglers, also, it is said, found shelter beneath this ancient roof.

Being the only inn in the town when it was built it enjoyed the prominence thus given to it for several years. It was the resort of mariners when in port, and lively evenings must have made the place attractive and famous. The prominent people of the province resorted hither when they visited the town, and probably many of them spent a night beneath its roof.

The incident which has caused this old inn to be remembered is that relative to Agnes Surriage, a daughter of Edward Surriage, a poor fisherman of the village. Late in the summer of 1742, when she was fifteen, she assisted in doing the work about the tavern. She was very pretty and artless, and possessed of a sweet and musical voice. While she was scrubbing the stairs, her feet bare, a coach drawn by four horses stopped at the door. From the carriage alighted Sir Charles Henry Frankland, then collector of customs at Boston. He was young and fine-looking, and accustomed to the best English society. As he entered the inn he saw the girl, and was greatly impressed by her face, despite the environment of her mean, torn and soiled garments. He called her to him, and gave her some money to buy a pair of shoes.

Frankland visited the town several times as he was superintending the construction of the fort here. The next time he saw the girl her feet were still bare, and he asked her why she had not purchased the shoes. She replied that she had, but kept them for Sunday wear. The extent of her poverty and need dawned upon him. Lover of the beautiful in everything, he felt the wrong he should do if he failed to better her condition. He asked her if she would like to be educated; to leave that drudgery. He obtained permission of her parents; gave her the advantages of the best schools in Boston; and she became an accomplished lady. They loved each other; and a few years later charges of improper intimacy were made. His family and social pride forbade his marrying one of lowly birth. Boston society refused to longer recognize them; and Frankland bought a tract of land in Hopkinton, where, upon a commanding site, he erected a manor house and laid out beautiful and extensive grounds. At this country seat, he lived, together with Agnes and her family, a life more or less secluded.

Being called to England on business in 1754, Frankland and Agnes sailed for London. English society refused her admission to its circle; and as soon after as possible the couple took a trip through Europe, proceeding to Lisbon, where they entered into the gay, fashionable life of the Portuguese. While pursuing its round of pleasures on the day of the great earthquake of November, 1755, he was riding with a lady to attend a church service, and both were buried beneath the walls of a falling building. The lady and horses were killed, but Frankland was saved. The incident, with all the shock of his narrow escape, brought him to his senses; and while buried beneath the ruins solemnly vowed that he would live a better life.

Agnes, upon the first intimation of the earthquake ran out of her house, where she was alone, into the street, and was saved. Almost wild with excitement, she wandered about the ruins in the streets, and heard Frankland's voice calling for help. She labored with almost superhuman strength to remove the debris that covered him, and at length was rewarded. His wounds were dressed at a house; then he sent for a priest, and Agnes Surriage became the Lady Agnes Frankland.

They returned to England, and on their passage had the marriage rite performed by an English clergyman. The Frankland family in London received her with every mark of esteem, and society of their rank welcomed her.

A short time afterward they returned to Boston, purchased a fine house for their winter home, retaining their beautiful estate in Hopkinton for their summer residence.

Being appointed consul-general of Portugal in 1757, he and his wife resided in Lisbon for several years. In 1763, they returned to Massachusetts, living upon the Hopkinton estate until he removed to Bath, England, when he died in 1768, at the age of fifty-two.

Lady Frankland returned to Hopkinton, where she remained till the breaking out of the Revolution, in the summer of 1775, when she returned to England. While waiting in Boston to sail, from the windows of her residence she watched the battle of Bunker Hill on June 17. Arriving in England, she resided for several years with the Frankland family. She then married John Drew, esq., a wealthy banker of Chichester in Sussex. She died April 23, 1783, aged fifty-five; and in the burial ground of St. Pancras Church, Chichester, there is a long series of epitaphs for the Drews, the one on the end of their altar-tomb being as follows:—

Dame Agnes Frankland, Relict of Sir Charles Henry Frankland, Bart.,

John Drew,

JONATHAN MOOER OF NEWBURY.

BY REV. ANSON TITUS.

Lt. Jonathan Mooer, son of Edmond Mooer, married May 10, 1670, Constance, daughter of Richard Langhorne, and resided in Newbury, where he died, 1693, aged about forty-seven years. His widow married, secondly, Nov. 1, 1697, John Mitchell of Newbury. In the will of Lieutenant Mooer he spoke of his aged father who was to receive maintenance. May 12, 1714, Richard Mooer of Lexington, and John, George and Daniel Monroe (three brothers who married three Mooer sisters) joined in petitioning the court that John Mitchell, their "father-in-law," might administer upon the estate of Lt. Jonathan Mooer "which was not already disposed of." This action we interpret to mean that the mother Constance was then deceased, and that the widow's dower was to be divided among the heirs. The Monroe brothers, sons of William Monroe, "the Scotchman," resided in Lexington, and the genealogy of their families is quite fully recorded in the history of that town.

The following are the children of Lt. Jonathan Mooer:—

- I. HANNAH, b. April 13, 1676; m. John Monroe.

- II. SARAH, mentioned in her father's will; m. George Monroe.
- III. JONATHAN, b. April 3, 1681; m. about 1701, Elizabeth ———, by whom he had Jonathan, b. July 27, 1702; Mary, b. Oct. 1, 1704; and Sarah, b. May 15, 1707, who m. May 21, 1725, Daniel Merrill.
- IV. RICHARD, b. July 24, 1683; removed to Lexington.
- V. SAMUEL, b. Feb. 20, 1685-6.
- VI. THOMAS, b. Nov. 6, 1688; died before Nov. 10, 1707. He was lame for some years before he died. In 1705 Philip Fowler, Ipswich, became his guardian.
- VII. DORATHY, b. Dec. 8, 1690; m. Daniel Monroe.

18. The following is an extract from the parish register of Chesham, Bucks, England, made by H. G. Somerby, esq.: Thomas Chase, of Hundred, in parish of Chesham. John², of Hundred, baptised Nov. 30, 1540; Richard², of Chesham, baptised August 30, 1542. Richard Chase² of Chesham married Joan Bishop April 16, 1562, and had the following children baptised: Robert³, Sept. 2, 1565; Henry³, Aug. 10, 1567; Lydia³, Oct. 4, 1573; Ezekiel³, April 23, 1576; Dorcas³, March 2, 1578; Aquila³, Aug. 14, 1580; Jason³, Jan. 13, 1583; Thomas³, July 18, 1585; Abigail³, Jan. 12, 1588; and Mordecai³, July 31, 1591. Aquila³, married and had sons Thomas⁴, and Aquila⁴, born 1618.—A. H. Lamson, Elkins, N. H.

22. Susanna Eastman, who married Thomas Wood, was born about 1673, and was daughter of Philip Eastman by his first wife, whose name is unknown. Roger was born about 1612, came to America in the Confidence, and was in Salisbury in 1640. He died there Dec. 16, 1694; and his wife Sarah died March 11, 1697.—David W. Hoyt, Providence, R. I.

41. A letter addressed to the town clerk of Scituate, Mass., would probably secure the birth and parentage of Anthony Vaughan.—Ed.

42. Susannah Low⁴, who married Asa Perley of Boxford in 1738, was daughter of Samuel Low³ of Ipswich, who was born in 1676, and died June 6, 1723. Asa's parents, Lt. Thomas and Hannah Perley, of Boxford, were appointed guardians of the three young children of the deceased and cared for them, and that is how the acquaintance and marriage of the couple came about. Samuel's grandfather Thomas Low¹ was living in Chebacco parish (now Essex), Ipswich, as early as 1644. He died Sept. 8, 1677. By his wife Susannah was born, in 1632, their son Dea. His son Thomas Eaton² was probably born in England about 1631, and went to Haverhill with his parents in November, 1646. He married, first, Martha Kent Aug. 14, 1656. She died March 9, 1657; and he married, second, Eunice Singletary, at Andover, Jan. 6, 1659. By the second wife, his son Thomas Eaton³ was born in Haverhill March 18, 1660. Thomas³, jr., married Hannah Webster of Haverhill May 5, 1687; and was killed by the Indians March 15, 1697, the day that Hannah Dustin was taken prisoner. His widow died Aug. 14, 1747. He was an influential and enterprising citizen, made freeman May 18, 1631, and was one of the first board of selectmen of Manchester, having been one of the petitioners to the general court for the separation of that section from Salem and its incorporation into a town. He sold his house and land in Salem in 1652. He is called a carpenter in 1659. He married, first, Alice —, who died March 8, 1631-2; and, second, Elizabeth Bradley, who probably survived him. THE OLD HOME.

I have gone—I cannot always go, you know;
 Best 'tis so—
 Home across the distant ridges of the years,
 With thy tears;
 And the old house, standing on the old ground,
 There I found.

In the parlor, in my fancy, I could trace Father's face;
 And my mother, with her old accustomed air,
 Sitting there;
 While beside them brothers, sisters, true and good,
 Silent stood.

Through the stillness swam the song of summer bird,
 And there stirred
 On the wall the leaf-flecked sunshine; and its glow
 Faded slow;
 But from all the loving lips I watched around—
 Not a sound.

GOWING-WELLMAN HOMESTEAD, LYNNFIELD.

BY THOMAS B. WELLMAN.

Should my reader be passing through the quiet village of Lynnfield Centre, about a fourth of a mile from its green he may see a triangular-shaped common, whereon for one hundred and eighty-two years has stood the old meeting house, built by the fathers and mothers of the hamlet, and near which they repose in peace. As the junction of Main and Essex streets is reached, he may see a specimen of ye olden time, excellently preserved, a colonial house, its erection dating back perhaps two hundred and forty years. It is a flat roofed, long, irregular building with massive chimneys. Some of the hearths contain tiles brought from England.

The house fronts on a spacious lawn which is shaded by one of the largest willow trees in the United States. This big tree gave the name to the venerable house, Willow Castle. It was brought as a walking stick, from the lands north of the house by one who was born there, while returning from courting, and is large enough to seat a dozen people upon a section of its trunk. The ponderous branches constantly sway to and fro to a great extent.

The house was built by Nathaniel Gowing, and remained in the family more than a century and a quarter. During the Revolution it was the Norwood house, and for the last sixty years has belonged to the present occupants and their kindred.

In the present limits we cannot mention the interesting events in the life of the patriarch which has so long withstood the elements. The lightning has struck its protecting tree, the fire has burned off its roof, and other portions have been similarly devoured, but still it stands. Within its comfortable, but not elegant rooms, events have transpired worthy of record, and could the old house speak we would be glad to listen. Every war (Mexican not excepted) has seen its sons go forth to fight for their country, and many others have gone to distant lands who were an honor to their birth-place. How often have these portals been swung open to receive a new inmate or to carry one forth never to return, and to admit a guest to a wedding. Many a time has some one devoid of a home been tenderly cared for till they were called to the home above. What large-sized families have been reared here! Sometimes a score of people have called this "home."

The old house is a repository of enough articles of the past to fill a small museum. Of late an old chair of perhaps a century and a half in age has been brought down from the attic and polished till its first mistress would hardly recognize it.

This house has also the distinction of being the one where the history of the town was written.

Tradition says that it is the third frame house in town. Its peers are still well preserved and bid fair to stand another century. Hundreds of acres used to belong to the old homestead. Could "Sir Gowing" who built these walls, with oaken corner posts more than a foot square, come from his sleep, probably on some portion of his fair and large domain, and behold on a part of it the railroad, the meeting house, the school house, and, instead of dwellings a "Sabbath day's journey" apart, find buildings near together and see the "improvements" of some of his descendants, would he not say "Verily, verily."

In front of the house are the ancient hollyhocks, peonies and roses, and the sweet clover, mock orange lilacs, etc., of later date. In the rear are peppermint, horsemint, catnip, sage, and horse radish, so plentiful in the olden time. Here, where the Jewsharp was heard is now the grand piano, where the little maiden played with broken crockery, blocks and rag babies, the little ones to-day have china and wax dolls with real hair, movable eyes, and screeching voice. In the old brick ovens are no longer cooked the savory viands for the thanksgiving and Sunday dinner, but the water still comes from the deep well, so well remembered by friends far away.

ROCKPORT BAPTISMS, 1755-1808.

BY WELLINGTON POOL.

THE following are all the baptisms recorded in the Sandy Bay, or Fifth Parish, of Gloucester, now the principal part of Rockport.

The notes were added to the original record probably a century ago by an aged resident of Sandy Bay.

The church was organized Feb. 13, 1755. The first pastor, Rev. Ebenezer Cleaveland, was born in Canterbury, Conn., about 1725; began to preach in Sandy Bay in 1752, in the log school house; and was ordained over the church in December, 1755. He was absent as chaplain in the French war from 1758 to 1760, being stationed near Lake Champlain, and in the Revolution during the winter of 1775-'76, being stationed at Dorchester Heights, in Rhode Island, and other places. Returning to his parish, he found very few of his male supporters, some had fallen in battle, others had died in prison ships, many had been lost at sea, and more were serving in the army or on naval vessels or privateers. His people could not support him; and he became for a while superintendent of the Dartmouth college land at Landaff, N. H., preaching there and in neighboring towns. He returned to Sandy Bay in 1785, and preached for several years for what his people could afford to pay him. Subsequently he removed to Amesbury, where he preached until about 1797, when he returned to Sandy Bay, remaining there until his decease, July 4, 1805, at the age of eight y.

TO MY DEAR AND LOVING HUSBAND.

If ever two were one, then surely we;
 If ever man were loved by wife, then thee;
 If ever wife was happy in a man,
 Compare with me ye women if you can.
 I prize thy love more than whole mines of gold,
 Or all the riches that the East doth hold.
 My love is such that rivers cannot quench,
 Nor ought but love from thee give recompense.
 Thy love is such I can no way repay,
 The heavens reward thee manifold I pray.
 Then while we live, in love let's so persevere,
 That when we live no more, we may live ever.
 —Anne Bradstreet.

GOV. SIMON BRADSTREET.

Gov. Simon Bradstreet was one of the more substantial and able supporters of the Massachusetts Bay colony. He was born in Horbling, Lincolnshire, Eng., in March, 1603, being son of a non-conforming clergyman who died when Simon was fourteen years old.

After his father's decease, Simon was committed to the care of Thomas Dudley, with whom he remained for eight years. He then entered Emmanuel college, Cambridge, where he remained a year, having his studies frequently interrupted. He then resided, as steward, in the family of the Earl of Lincoln, and subsequently, in a similar capacity, with the Countess of Warwick.

Mr. Bradstreet married Anne, daughter of Mr. Dudley, with whom he had been brought up, she being but sixteen years of age. Soon after his marriage, he agreed with his father-in-law, John Winthrop and others, to emigrate to New England, and settle a colony. They accordingly sailed in the ship Arbella March 29, 1630, and arrived at Salem June 12.

Mr. Bradstreet spent the summer and winter in Salem, and the next spring, with others, commenced the settlement of Newtown, now Cambridge, residing there several years.

He was granted five hundred acres of land at Salem in 1639. He was also interested in the colony at Andover, building the first mill on the Cochickewick river, in 1644. After living in Ipswich a short time, being there in 1645, he removed to Andover; and was eminently useful in promoting that settlement, being a selectman of the town from the election of the first board to 1672, when his wife died and he removed to Salem. He married, secondly, Anne, widow of Capt. Joseph Gardner, daughter of Emmanuel, and sister to Sir George Downing.

In Andover, Mr. Bradstreet did considerable business in sawing lumber, and shipping it to Barbadoes, where he exchanged it for West India goods, which he brought home and sold. His original residence in Andover was burned in July, 1666, and he built and lived in the house still standing in North Andover on the Boston and Haverhill road. In this fire the family suffered great loss, especially Mrs. Bradstreet, many of her manuscripts and books being destroyed.

Mr. Bradstreet lived in Salem until his decease, March 27, 1697, at the age of ninety-four, the nestor of New England. His remains were placed in a tomb in the ancient Charter street burying ground, his tomb bearing the following inscription, now entirely worn away:—

armiger, ex ordine senatoris,
 in colonia Massachusettensi ab anno 1630, usque ad annum 1673.

Deinde ad annum 1679, vice-gubernator.

Denique ad annum 1686, ejusdem coloniae, communi et constanti

GUBERNATOR.

Vir, judicio lynceario praeditus,
 quem nec numma nec honos allexit.

Regis auctoritatem, et populi libertatem,

æqua lance bibiavit. Religione cordatus, vita innocuus, mundum et vicit, et deseruit, 27 die Martii

A. D. 1697, annoque Guliel:

3t IX et Æt 94.

Mr. Bradstreet came to New England as an assistant in the new government, and held the office forty-eight years. He was the first secretary of the colony, and held that office for thirteen years; was deputy-governor five years, 1672-1679, and governor ten years, 1679-1686, 1689-1691. His title for many years was "Ye worshipful." He was one of the first commissioners of the United Colonies in 1643, and served many years.

In 1653, he vigorously opposed making war on the Dutch in New York, and on the Indians, and his influence and efforts succeeded.

In 1661 he was sent, with Mr. Norton, to England to congratulate Charles II. on the restoration, and to secure their charter privileges, in which they were successful.

Mr. Bradstreet was at the head of the moderate party when the king demanded the charter, and he suffered the reproach of those who objected to its surrender.

He strenuously opposed Andross, and when, in 1689, the people put down the latter's authority, they made Mr. Bradstreet their president. He continued at the head of the administration till May, 1692, when the new charter, establishing the province, arrived. Mr. Bradstreet was then eighty-nine years old, having been in the service of the colony sixty-two years.

He was puritanic in his religion, and prosecuted the Quakers so severely that Bishop, in his New England Judged by the Spirit of the Lord, called him "a man hardened in blood and a cruel persecutor." He was, however, opposed to the witchcraft delusion.

He was a just magistrate judged by the times, possessing prudence, sound judgment and strict integrity. Believing fully in his mission, he sought usefulness rather than popularity.

In his home life he was a tender father and loving husband. He took pride in his wife's poetical talents, and greatly mourned her death.

ADAMS NOTE.

Richard Adams, of Salem, came in the Abigail, 1635, aged twenty-nine, was a bricklayer from Northampton, with Susan, aged twenty-six, probably his wife. Perhaps he lived at Charlestown in 1674, and may have been the same who died Oct. 6, 1674, at Malden, whose wife Elizabeth died Nov. —, 1656. His will mentions his wife, probably not mother of any of his three daughters, Mary Clough, Sarah, wife of Edward Counts, both of Charlestown, Ruth Glover, and Hannah, born Jan. —, 1663, unmarried; and made executor Lazarus Glover, perhaps husband of Ruth.—Savage.

THE ESSEX ANTIQUARIAN.

VOL. II.

SALEM, MASS., NOVEMBER, 1898.

No. 11.

PART OF SALEM IN 1700.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

THE frontispiece is a map of that section of Salem that is bounded by Washington, Essex and North streets, and the North river. It is based on actual surveys and title deeds, and is drawn on a scale of two hundred feet to an inch. It shows the location of all the houses standing in 1700. The braces marked "a" show where Bridge street now runs, "b," Federal street, "c," Lynde street, and that marked "d" where Sewall street begins. Lynde street was laid out in 1751, Federal street (first called Marlborough street) in 1793, and Sewall street in 1801.

Washington street was first called a street in 1656, Street from the meeting-house to North river in 1666, Broad street in 1687, Town-house street in 1695,* Town street in 1698, School-house street in 1698, Old Town-house street in 1726, Main street in 1731, School-house lane in 1742, School street in 1762, Court street in 1792, and Washington street in 1815.

Essex street was originally called Batter's lane,† and was first called a street in 1669, when it was known as Street to the meeting-house. It was known as Main street as early as 1696, as Paved street § in 1787, and as Essex street in 1796.

North street was called Williams' lane before 1671, Lane by house of Dr. Daniel Weld to ye water side in 1685, Street where Dr. Weld liveth in 1687, Weld's lane in 1696, Lane leading to ye North river in 1718, Curwen's lane in 1719, Street or Lane leading to ye great bridge over the North river in 1749, Lane to the great bridge in 1756, Daland's Lane in 1756, Street to North river in 1774, Street from North bridge to town in 1774, Street leading to Northfield bridge in 1783, Road to great bridge in 1783, Street or Lane leading from the town pump to the North bridge in 1788, and North street in 1801.

In the sketches which follow, after 1700, titles and deeds referred to pertain to the houses and the land under and immediately adjacent thereto and not always to the whole lot, the design being, after 1700, to show the history of the houses principally.

Edmund Batter House. Edmund Batter owned the strip of land on Essex street from Washington to North streets, of the width of the corner lots; and he lived in the house that stood on this lot, on the corner of Essex and Washington streets. Mr. Batter was a merchant, and was living on this corner as early as 1649. He died in August, 1685, at the age of eighty-seven, leaving widow Mary (who was daughter of Daniel Gookin, esq., of Cambridge) and four children. In his will he gave to his wife the western or new end of the house and new leanto adjoining the old bake-house and the western part of the lot, and to his son Edmund the eastern or old end of the house (where Mrs. Glover then lived) with the middle kitchen or old hall, the barn and shop, and the eastern part of the lot. Mrs. Batter died

*Washington street was called Town, or Town-house street, School, or School-house street, and Court, or Court-house street, respectively, because the town-school- and court-house stood in the middle of the street in early times.

§So called because the part of Essex street near the Mechanic hall was so wet and swampy that it was necessary to pave it in early times.

in 1702, having devised her part of the estate to her son Edmund. He was a tanner, and retained the house until his death, Nov. 2, 1756, at the age of eighty-four. He devised the estate to his daughter Martha, who afterward married John Ward of Salem, a peruke maker. Mr. and Mrs. Ward conveyed the western half of the house and the barn and larger part of the lot to Nathaniel Gould of Salem, a cabinet-maker, Nov. 26, 1761,* and Mr. Gould sold it to Benjamin Coats of Salem, a cordwainer, April 19, 1773.† Mr. and Mrs. Ward conveyed the eastern part of the house and lot and shop and coal houses to William Northey July 25, 1769.§ The estate was owned by Messrs. Coats and Northey when the great fire of Oct. 6, 1774, destroyed all the buildings, together with the adjoining Tabernacle meeting-house, and other houses and buildings. At the time of the fire the house was occupied by Nathaniel Dabney, apothecary. By additions it had become very large.

Elizabeth Batter Lot. Edmund Batter devised this lot, in 1685, to his daughter Elizabeth, who was then a young child. She died, under age, in 1701; and her mother, who was administrator of her estate, conveyed the lot to Henry West, sr., of Salem, sadler, Jan. 20, 1701-2.‖ Five days later, Mr. West sold the lot to Elizabeth's mother.‡ Mrs. Batter died in 1702, having devised it to her son Daniel, who became a merchant in Boston.

Mary Emerson Lot. Edmund Batter devised this lot, in 1685, to his daughter Mary, who was then a young girl. She subsequently married Rev. John Emerson, jr., of Gloucester, and, while living in New Castle, N. H., Dec. 22, 1710,¶ sold the lot to Benjamin Pickman of Boston.

Rev. John Emerson House. The north end of this lot down to the upper dashes was originally a part of the lot of Rev.

Edward Norris, and subsequently of his son Edward, who conveyed it to Edmund Batter Aug. 20, 1679.* Mr. Batter died in 1685, having devised it to his daughter Mary, who subsequently married Rev. John Emerson.

The middle portion of the lot (between the dashes) was a part of Mr. Batter's original lot, and he devised it to his daughter Mary. Both of these sections were conveyed by Mr. and Mrs. Emerson to Rev. Nicholas Noyes May —, 1697;‡ and Jan. 1, 1698-9, he conveyed them to Mr. Emerson.§

The end of the lot next the street was also a portion of Mr. Batter's original lot, and was conveyed by him to Daniel Andrew of Salem, bricklayer, Dec. 13, 1669.‖ Mr. Andrew erected a house upon it, probably the next year; and, Dec. 17, 1677, conveyed the house and land to Thomas Gardner, jr., of Salem, merchant.‡ Lieutenant Gardner died in 1695; and Ju: 29, 1698, his representatives sold the estate to Stephen Sewall.¶ Mr. Sewall conveyed it to Mr. Emerson Aug. 16, 1698; and thus the whole lot became Mr. Emerson's.

In 1703-4, the rear sections of the lot were called by Daniel Batter his own pasture, but just what his interest was, if he had any, does not appear. He, however, Nov. 25, 1704, conveyed the entire lot to Joseph Orne, jr., of Salem, cordwainer;‡‡ and, Jan. 8, 1712, Mr. Orne conveyed it to his brother Timothy Orne of Salem, cordwainer.§§ Sept. 11, 1734, Mr. Emerson having died, and leaving his widow Mary living at Portsmouth, N. H., she with her brother Edmund Batter, the surviving heirs of the original owner (Edmund Batter) released their interest in the house and land to Timothy Orne.‖‖‖

Captain Orne added to the house, bringing the front to the sidewalk, and making a gable in the street side at the western end, by raising the roof in front. The leanto must have been added very much later, as the framework is of sawn soft lumber. He died in 1753, aged seventy-one, having devised the house and lot to his sons Samuel and John. Nov. 11, 1760, these brothers conveyed the premises to their brother Timothy Orne.* In 1761, Mr. Orne built the house now standing next easterly of this house and removed thither, his son Samuel occupying the old house thereafter. Timothy Orne died in 1767, having devised the old house and lot to his son Timothy, who lived in Danvers. The son Timothy died in the winter of 1789-90, having devised the estate to his wife Elizabeth, who owned it until July 29, 1824, when she (being then of Boston) conveyed it to Robert Brookhouse of Salem, merchant.† Mr. Brookhouse conveyed it to Abel Hersey of Salem, upholsterer, Nov. 26, 1825.§ Mr. Hersey failed, and his assignees sold the estate to Larkin Thorndike and Betsey Varney April 14, 1829.|| Betsey Varney died, and her executor conveyed her interest in the property to Dr. John G. Treadwell of Salem July 1, 1836.‡ On the same day Dr. Treadwell conveyed it to Dr. George Osborne of Danvers.¶ Mr. Thorndike conveyed his interest to John Jewett Oct. 13, 1845; and Mr. Jewett conveyed the same to Dr. Osborne Jan. 1, 1856.†† Dr. Osborne lived in Peabody, and died, intestate, in 1882. In the division of his estate this was assigned to his daughter Eliza D., who married Michael W. Shepard, and died in 1893, and the old house and land remain in her estate. This is one of the very old houses in Salem. Even the upper plates and beams are of oak, hewn about a foot square, and in the attic may still be seen thick planks hewn from the primitive logs. The picture shows the old house as it is now (see opposite page 171).

Daniel Batter Lot. This lot was a part of the original lot of Edmund Batter, who devised it to his son Daniel; and Daniel sold it to Stephen Sewall Feb. 3, 1703-4.*

Stephen Sewall House. The northern portion of this lot, down to the lot of Dr. Weld, was the western portion of Elder Samuel Sharp's field. Elder Sharp died in or before 1662, and his wife Alice survived him three years. Upon her decease this section of the field was divided among four of his children, the division lines running from east to west where the dashes are placed at either end.

To whom the northern strip was assigned the writer does not know, but it was "ye widow Eleanor Robinson's" in 1671. She probably had only a dower interest in it, and at her decease in 1674 it came into the possession of Edmund Batter, who died in 1685, having devised it to his son Edmund. The latter conveyed it to Stephen Sewall Oct. 9, 1696.†

The next strip was assigned to Elizabeth, first wife of Christopher Phelps. Mr. Phelps conveyed it to Mr. Sewall May 18, 1685.§

The third strip was assigned to Nathaniel Sharp, who conveyed it to John Turner June 5, 1671.|| Mr. Turner died possessed of it in 1680; and his widow Elizabeth subsequently married Maj. Charles Redford and possessed it. Upon her decease, Mr. Turner's only son and heir, Capt. John Turner, conveyed it to Mr. Sewall Jan. 10, 1697.‡

The next strip was assigned to Hannah Sharp, who afterwards married Peter Odlin.¶ They conveyed it to Mr. Sewall

May 2, 1685.* Upon this part of Sharp's field (at the cross[†]) was erected about 1630 the block house or fort for the defence of the town, Mr. Sharp being the gunner.

The remainder of the lot came into the possession of Mr. Sewall as follows: The northern part down to the dashes was originally owned by Henry Cook, who died in 1661. Judith Cook, his widow, conveyed it to Joshua Rea, husbandman, May 21, 1662.† The next space (down to the next dashes) Mr. Cook's son John conveyed to Thomas Maule March 7, 1671.§ June 10, 1672, Mr. Maule sold the northern half of the strip to Mr. Rea;|| and also about that time Mr. Rea became possessed of the other half. He died owning the lot, and his son Joshua conveyed both this and the section above to Mr. Sewall April 6, 1685.‡ The next section (down to the next dashes) was a portion of the estate of Edward Norris, who conveyed it to George Booth, as a part of the consideration for the instruction of his son Edward in the trade of a carpenter, Jan. 9, 1677-8.¶ Mr. Booth conveyed it to Dr. Daniel Weld, who sold it to Mr. Sewall April 7, 1685.‡ The remainder of the lot was a part of the original lot of Edmund Batter, who conveyed it to Mr. Sewall Oct. —, 1681. Upon this portion of his homestead, which was the first part he bought, Mr. Sewall erected his residence.

Mr. Sewall died possessed of this house and lot in 1725. Feb. 25, 1725-6, his children released their interest in the estate to their eldest brother Samuel Sewall of Boston,†† and he conveyed it to his brother Mitchell Sewall, esq., of Salem Dec. 2, 1735.§§ Mitchell Sewall died possessed of it in 1748; and April 16, 1751, his representative conveyed it to William Lynde of Salem, with the house, barn, coach house, etc., thereon.* Mr. Lynde lived in this house, and died in 1753, bequeathing to his cousin William Lynde of Saybrook, Conn., a legacy, which was paid by an assignment to him of this and other real estate Oct. 3, 1753.† Oct. 21, 1774, Mr. Lynde conveyed the premises to Hon. Benj. Lynde of Salem,§ the grantor probably never having lived here. Judge Lynde died in 1792, having devised the house and lot to his daughter Mary, wife of Andrew Oliver. She died in 1807, leaving this and certain other real estate to the children of her deceased son Rev. Thomas Fitch Oliver. A partition was made among these children in 1810, the house and lot being assigned to the daughters, Sarah Pynchon Oliver and Elizabeth Digby Belcher Oliver, both of Salem, spinsters; and they let the house to William Hook, a cabinet maker. He hired it until Aug. 17, 1816, when he bought the estate of the Oliver sisters.|| The ancient house was taken down by Mr. Hook on election day, 1830. The accompanying picture of the old house was made from a description of the same given by an aged person who was familiar with it (see opposite page 171).

John Mascoll Lot. This was a part of the original lot of Edmund Batter, who conveyed it to John Mascoll, jr., of Salem, gunsmith, Nov. 16, 1676.‡ The writer has not discovered evidence to show that a house stood upon this lot in 1700; though it is thought that John Mascoll built a house upon it immediately after his purchase, which was at about the time of his marriage. The title descended through his daughter Sarah, wife of Isaac Williams.

Henry West Lot. This was a part of the original lot of Edmund Batter, who conveyed it, except an eleven-foot strip on the east side, to Henry West of Salem, saddler, June 17, 1670.¶ Mr. Batter conveyed the eleven-foot strip to Mr. West Oct. 10, 1682.* Though the evidence is insufficient to prove that Mr. West lived on this lot in 1700, the writer believes that he did. Mr. West died in 1703, and, the estate being entailed, it passed to his son Henry, and then to his children, who conveyed it to John Norris March 28, 1782.† The heirs of Edward Norris, who was brother and heir of John Norris, conveyed the estate to widow Elizabeth Williams of Salem Aug. 27, 1811.§

Deliverance Parkman House. This lot was a part of the original lot of Edmund Batter, who gave it to his brother-in-law Hilliard Veren, sr., of Salem, and the latter's daughters Dorcas and Sarah, "my two cousins," Jan. 18, 1669.¶ Sarah married Deliverance Parkman 9:10 mo: 1673, and this lot came into the possession of Mr. Parkman. He built his house upon it at about that time. Sarah died 14:11: 1681-2, and he died in 1715. Their heirs conveyed the estate to John Clarke of Salem, merchant, March 17, 1730, Mr. Clarke then occupying the premises.‡ Mr. Clarke died in 1764, and his widow continued to occupy the house with her daughter Deborah Fairfax Clarke, who married, Dec. 16, 1780, John Hartley Anderson, an English physician. Dr. Anderson died Nov. 16, 1781; and his widow, with her only child, Mary Clarke Anderson, continued to occupy the house with the widow Clarke. The latter died in 1784; and Mrs. Anderson and her daughter continued to live here until Mrs. Anderson's decease in 1841. The daughter, who never married, remained in the old house until it was taken down in 1835. The picture herewith given was sketched early in this century (see opposite page 178).

Dr. Daniel Weld House. The northern half of this lot (down to the dashes) was the western portion of the original lot of Henry Cook in 1649. He died in 1661, and his widow, Judith Cook, conveyed the northern half of this part to Joshua Rea of Salem May 21, 1662.* The southern half of the northern half Mr. Cook's son John, of Salem, blacksmith, conveyed to Thomas Maule of Salem, tailor, March 7, 1671;† and Mr. Maule conveyed to Joshua Rea the northern side of his part (probably as security) June 10, 1672.§ Mr. Maule built a house thereon, which was at first occupied by Richard Maybee, and subsequently by Dr. Daniel Weld. Mr. Maule conveyed this part of the lot, with the house, to Dr. Weld, who was then living here, May 12, 1674.¶ Mr. Rea died possessed of his portion, and his son Joshua conveyed the whole of the northern half of the whole lot to Stephen Sewall, with the house and barn, April 6, 1685.‡ Mr. Sewall conveyed the same to Dr. Weld the next day.¶¶ March 30, 1688, Henry Cook's eldest son, Isaac, released to Messrs. Rea, Weld and Sewall the same portion that his mother had conveyed to Joshua Rea. The whole of the southern half of the lot was the western end of the original lot of Rev. Edward Norris, who died possessed of it in 1659. He devised it to his son Edward, who conveyed the northern part of it (a strip twenty-five feet wide, and of the whole length of this lot) to Dr. Weld Nov. 3, 1677.†† Mr. Norris conveyed the remainder of his part to George Booth Jan. 9, 1677-8.¶¶ Mr. Booth conveyed it to Stephen Sewall, who sold it to Dr. Weld in 1685.¶¶

Dr. Weld died before March 6, 1713, when two of his daughters, widow Barbary Hide and Elizabeth, wife of Capt. John Gardner, both of Salem, conveyed to Thomas Purchase of Salem, blacksmith, a lot from the northwest corner of the premises about forty-eight feet square, with the house thereon, then occupied by Roger Pealand Joseph Browne, mariners.* Mr. Purchase conveyed the house and lot to Isaac Williams, jr., of Salem, cordwainer, May 18, 1716.† Mr. Williams sold the house and lot to Thomas Bray of Salem, mariner, Nov. 22, 1728.§ Mr. Bray died soon after, and, Dec. 29, 1733, his administratrix conveyed it to Joseph Henderson of Salem, fisherman.|| Mr. Henderson died in 1767; and, under his will, his widow conveyed the estate to the proprietors of the North church June 15, 1772.‡ The house was immediately taken down, and the land added to the church lot.

The remainder of the lot, with a house thereon (probably a new one which Dr. Weld had built, about 1700, for his home), was conveyed by his said daughters (widow Hide having married Edmund Batter) to George Deland of Salem, cordwainer, Nov. 12, 1718.¶

Edward Norris House and Elizabeth Glover Lot. These lots comprised the eastern end of the original lot of William Gerrish, which ran through to Williams' lane. When of Newbury, gentleman, Mr. Gerrish conveyed the lot and house thereon to Rev. Edward Norris 7 : 6 mo : 1649. Mr. Norris lived here until his decease, in 1659. He devised "my dwelling house I now live in" and the land to his son Edward, who was a schoolmaster here from 1640 to 1671. Edward lived here until his death, in 1684. In his will he devised the premises to his two children, Edward and Elizabeth, equally. Sept. 4, 1695, the children made a division, Edward taking the northern half and the house and Elizabeth the southern half.

Elizabeth had married Joseph Glover, and was his widow at the time of her father's death, living in 1685 in the house of Edmund Batter on the corner. She married, secondly, Samuel Moulton of Rehoboth; and they conveyed the lot to her only son Edward Glover of Rehoboth, cordwainer, March 4, 1706-7.* Three days later, Edward conveyed it to Capt. Habbakuk Gardner of Salem, mariner.†

Mr. Norris lived in his father's house until his disease, in 1700. He was succeeded by his son Edward, who lived here until 1769, when he died, having devised the estate to his four children, Edward, John, Elizabeth and Judith. Edward lived in the house when, in 1774, it was destroyed in the great fire.

Rev. Nicholas Noyes House. The northern part of this lot (down to the dashes) was the southeastern corner of Sharp's field, of which Elder Samuel Sharp died possessed, in or before 1662. In the division of his estate in 1667, this portion was assigned to his daughter, wife of Thomas Jeggles,§ with the exception of a small piece in the northeastern corner measuring fifteen feet on the street and twenty-five feet on the rear end, running back ten rods. This little strip had belonged to Nathaniel Sharp, who had the adjoining lot on that side, and he conveyed it, with the remainder of his lot to Capt. John Price Dec. 18, 1684.|| Capt. Price died possessed of it in 169-, and his only son and heir Walter Price conveyed it to Rev. Nicholas Noyes Sept. 14, 1698.‡ The remaining portion of the northern part of this lot, which had been assigned to Abigail Jeggles, was conveyed by her husband to William Brown of Salem Dec. 21, 1682.¶ April 15, 1684, Mr. Brown conveyed it to Rev. Mr. Noyes;¶ and, May 22, 1684, as administrator of his father and mother, Samuel and Alice Sharp, Nathaniel Sharp released the lot to Mr. Noyes.¶

his house in 1649, the original lot running through to Williams' lane. Mr. Cook died Dec. 25, 1661. The estate then came into the hands of Theodore Price, who died possessed of it in 1672. His administrator conveyed it, with the barn and house in which the deceased had dwelt, to Hiliard Veren jr., of Salem July 9, 1672.* March 4, 1677-8, Mr. Veren conveyed the premises to Ezekiel Cheever of Salem,† Mr. Veren then living in the house. Peter Cheever was called the owner in 1682; and, April 14, 1684, Rev. Thomas Cheever of Malden (Ezekiel's brother) conveyed the lot, with the house, bake house and stable, to Mr. Noyes.§ Jan. 31, 1687, Isaac Cook, eldest son and heir of Henry Cook, the original owner, released the lot to Mr. Noyes.||

Rev. Mr. Noyes died Dec. 13, 1717; and his administrators conveyed the estate to Rev. Samuel Fisk, his successor in the ministry, July 18, 1718.‡ Mr. Fisk conveyed the house and lot to Benjamin Pickman Dec. 15, 1762.¶ In 1764, Mr. Pickman built the large brick house on the northeast corner of the lot, and the old house was taken down.

Lewis Hunt House. This lot was a part of Sharp's field, being the northern portion of the lot assigned to Nathaniel Sharp in the division of his father's estate in 1667. In the house standing upon the lot in 1684 Nathaniel lived, and it was probably the home of Elder Sharp, the father. Nathaniel was a mariner, and he conveyed the house and lot, for sixty-six pounds, to Capt. John Price of Salem, merchant, Dec. 18, 1684. Capt. Price died possessed of the land in 1691, but the old house was gone. His only son and administrator, Walter Price, conveyed the lot, for forty-three pounds, to Lewis Hunt of Salem, mariner, Sept. 15, 1698.†† Mr.

Hunt immediately erected a new house thereon, and lived in it. He died possessed of the estate in 1717; and his daughter Hannah Hunt released the house and lot to her brother William Hunt Dec. 21, 1731.* William Hunt died in 1780 possessed of the "mansion house," bake house, barn and lot; and in the division of his real estate in 1782, the buildings and eastern partion of the lot were assigned to his son Lewis Hunt.‡ Deacon Lewis Hunt was a baker, and had his shop in the front end of the house. He died in 1797; and the children sold the estate to John Russell of Salem in 1829 and 1831. Mr. Russell died April 12, 1853, having devised the estate to his children, Rev. John Lewis Russell and Sarah Orne Russell. In August, 1863, while they owned the estate, the old house was taken down. The picture of it herewith given was taken about 1857 (see opposite page 178).

John Pomeroy House. This lot was assigned, in 1667, to John Norton of Salem, house carpenter, who married a daughter of Elder Samuel Sharp, this being a portion of the Sharp field. Mr. Norton sold it, with the house, to John Pomeroy of Salem, mariner, Oct. 4, 1674.§ The house was gone Dec. 16, 1709, when Mr. Pomeroy's widow Mary, then wife of John Foster, and her only son, John Pomeroy, conveyed the lot to Lewis Hunt.||

James Gillingham House and Edmund Batter Lot. These lots belonged to the widow Eleanor Robinson in 1656 and 1666. She lived in the house, and died in 1674, probably having a life estate only, Edmund Batter being the owner in fee. Mr. Batter died in 1685, having devised the house and land to his son Edmund, of Salem, tanner, Oct. 18, 1695. Edmund conveyed the small lot and the house to James Gillingham,‡ the house then being occupied by John Bligh. Mr. Gillingham took down the old house, probably in 1719.

The larger lot was conveyed by Mr. Batter to William Hunt of Salem, merchant, Oct. 2, 1734.*

John Milk House and Estate of William Lake House. Thomas Wilkes of Salem, shipwright, and his wife Mary, for twenty-seven pounds, conveyed to Thomas Hale of Newbury these two lots, the eastern end of the Benjamin Orne lot and the house on the Lake lot Oct. 1, 1656.† Mr. Hale evidently sold, prior to 1661, the eastern portion of the Orne lot to Ralph Fogg.

Mr. Hale conveyed the John Milk lot to John Milk of Salem Oct. 6, 1666.§ It is now nearly all included in Federal street. Mr. Milk built a house upon the lot, lived in it, and died possessed of the same in 1689. By his will he devised the northern half of the lot and house to his son John, and the southern half of the lot and barn to his daughter Mary Milk, to be equally divided lengthwise. His widow Sarah lived in the house. Joseph Wesson of Reading and wife Sarah, granddaughter of John Milk, sr., deceased, and probably daughter and heir of Mr. Milk's daughter Mary, conveyed the southern half to Joshua Hicks of Salem, shopkeeper, April 11, 1726.|| The northern half of the lot was conveyed by John Milk of Boston and James Milk of Falmouth, Me., shipwrights, sons and heirs of John Milk, jr., to Joshua Hicks May 13, 1734.‡ The old house apparently was then gone.

Mr. Hale, then of Salem, glover, conveyed the Lake lot and the house to John Knights of Salem, mason, Nov. 6, 1661.¶ The house was small, and had a leanto in 1666. For thirty-five pounds, Mr. Knights sold the lot, with the house and barn, to William Lake of Salem, set-work cooper, Jan. 18, 1665-6. Mr. Lake died in 1680, leaving widow Ann and two young daughters, Abigail and Mary.†† The place was released by William Allen and Abigail Allen, both of Salem, children of Abigail Lake, May 21, 1731, to Paul Langdon of Hopkinton, joiner,* whose wife Mary was daughter of Mary Lake. Mr. Langdon and his wife Mary conveyed one-half of the house and lot to Samuel Epes of Salem, mariner, May 24, 1732.† The house was gone in 1741.

Benjamin Orne House. The eastern end of this lot early belonged to Thomas Wilkes of Salem, shipwright, and his wife Mary. They conveyed it, with other real estate, to Thomas Hale of Newbury Oct. 1, 1656.§ Mr. Hale evidently sold it to Ralph Fogg prior to 1661.

This lot belonged to Ralph Fogg in 1656, the southern boundary line being upon a ridge made by Mr. Fogg by the digging of a ditch. He went to London, where he died, and his son and heir John Fogg of Barnstable, Devonshire, Eng., gentleman, conveyed the land to his (John's) brother Ezekiel Fogg of London, merchant, Jan. 2, 1674-5.|| The latter conveyed it to William Longstaff of Salem, cordwainer, May 25, 1676.‡ Immediately upon his purchase of the lot Mr. Longstaff built a house thereon, in which he lived. Jan. 9, 1677, he conveyed one-half of the lot and house to Benjamin Horne¶ of Salem, tailor. Mr. Horne evidently bought the other half, as his children sold the whole of the estate in 1734, by their several deeds, one of which refers to the house, in explanation why it was not conveyed, as follows: "Ye house being down."††

Estate of John Turner Lot. This belonged to William Brown, jr., merchant, in 1666, and April 18, 1671, to William Lake, who then sold it to John Turner. Mr. Turner died possessed of it in 1680. "Ye Turners" had it in 1696, and it was owned by Stephen Sewall in 1726.

THE READING OF THE WILL.

In rest so sweet and hardly earned
Was lowly laid the dead;
The living to the homestead turned,
With slow and silent tread.

They, though the solemn rites forbore,
The sordid wish conceived
To learn from out the goodman's store
The legacies bequeathed.

And some were glad, and others stirred
To angry thoughts of ill,
While listening anxiously they heard
The reading of the will.

EARLY METHODS OF COOKING.

IN the early settlement of Essex county food, as now, was baked, roasted, fried or boiled. The colonists had the necessary means of cooking in these several ways.

Vegetables and meats, as well as water, were boiled in various kettles suspended over the open hearth-fire by pot-hooks and trammels from a movable crane which swung in the fire-place. Pot-hooks were short pieces of small-sized iron rod, bent partly over at each end so as to form hooks. Trammels were similar to pot-hooks, but longer, and made to shut together by sliding, so that their length could be changed at will. In the earlier days trammels were placed far up the chimney, when there was no crane, being supported by a bar of iron placed across the flue. In the inventory of the estate of Abraham Belknap of Lynn, in 1643, pot-hooks and pot-hangers receive their first mention in the county.

Iron pots were the earliest cooking vessels in use here, being mentioned in the inventory of the estate of Samuel Smith of Enon (Wenham) in 1642. In the Belknap inventory a brass pot is first mentioned.

In the latter inventory, brass and iron kettles are named. Copper kettles were also early used. It was a sacred duty of the thrifty housewife to keep her brass and copper kettles brightly polished.

Small kettles or boilers, made of brass or iron, and called skillets, were in common use here in the earliest days, the Belknap inventory mentioning "three ould scillets."

The fire-pan was in use all through the colonial period. It was a shallow iron dish about the size of a spider, though generally deeper, and stood on three legs, which were about eight inches in length. It had a close-fitting cover, with a rim about an inch high. The food to be cooked was placed in the pan, and the pan was set upon or in the hot coals or ashes on the hearth, the cover being also covered with hot coals or ashes.

ANCIENT FRYING PAN.

Meats, etc., were fried over a fire in the early days much the same as now. The ancient frying pans* had long handles, which were necessary because of the heat of the hearth-fire over which the pans were held. For use in stoves and ranges, their handles were shortened, and they were and are still called spiders. The Belknap inventory contains the earliest mention of frying pans here.

Gridirons for boiling meat and fish have always been in use in this county. The first mention made of one here is in the inventory of the estate of Hugh Churchman of Lynn, in 1644.

The toasting-iron for toasting bread and cheese before or over a fire was also early in use.

Some of the poorer families in the early days roasted meat by suspending it before the hearth-fire by a strong cord. To have the heat applied to it evenly on every side a twist was frequently given to the cord,

Most families, however, had one or more iron rods called spits. The spit was thrust through the meat to be roasted which was then securely fastened in an even mass by thin and narrow pieces of iron about seven inches in length. This was done by thrusting the skewers through the meat and through the holes in the spit. Dr. Felt says that skewers were sometimes made of wood. The spit was placed horizontally above the hearth before the open fire, the ends resting on supports in such a way that it could be turned. In the early days, poor boys were hired to turn the spit, and they throve on the gravy that fell into the dripping pan. The Belknap inventory contains the first mention of a spit in Essex county.

Swift refers to the spit in the following couplet:—

“With Peggy Dixon thoughtful sit, Contriving for the pot and spit.”

Remembering the days of the spit, the reader will undoubtedly recall the old expression, “Done to a turn.”

Whether the roasting was done on a spit or cord the meat was repeatedly basted with gravy from the dripping pan, which was placed below the meat to catch the fat that fell therefrom. The first mention of a dripping pan here is also found in the Belknap inventory. It is still used, though now it holds in the baking-oven both meat and gravy.

The constant attention that had to be bestowed upon a roast was a burden upon the early cooks, and a mechanical contrivance to keep the spit in motion was invented, being named a jack. The power was obtained from heavy weights. The machine was fastened above the fireplace, and was connected with the spit by a belt. It had to be wound up, there being a ratchet within the drum next to the large lower cog-wheel. The frontispiece is a picture of an ancient jack. The spits used with jacks were heavier than others. Jacks remained in common use until they were superseded by tin kitchens about 1790.

Pope notices the jack as follows:—

Scream like the winding of ten thousand jacks.”

The tin kitchen, which caused the passing of the jack, was a tin cover which was placed upon the hearth over the roast, the side next to the fire being the only one open. The cover collected the heat and applied it, in some degree, to all sides of the meat. The engraving shows how the spit was placed in this frame, and how it was turned by the handle. Around the handle end of the spit were a series of small holes. The little point projecting from the back part of the handle was inserted in these holes, one at a time, resting for a few moments in each one successively, thus holding the roast securely in the same position until a partial turn was given by moving the point to the next hole. This was a great improvement; still, the necessity of constant watchfulness and frequent turning of the meat remained.

The brick ovens of our fathers must not be forgotten. From the earliest settlement until recent times ovens were built by the side of the kitchen fireplace, at a convenient height. They were flat on the bottom and arched above. Some of them were quite deep, and a thin shovel, made of wood or iron, called a peel, was necessary to move in and out the pots of brown bread, Indian pudding and beans. The bricks were first heated by a roaring wood fire in the oven itself, which was continued until they were sufficiently hot. The remains of the fire were then removed, and the oven thoroughly swept. The earthen pots of prepared bread, pudding and beans were placed therein, and the entrance closed. After the gradual and thorough baking of from twelve to fifteen hours these products of the culinary art came forth with a flavor and deliciousness that is rare in these days of modern cookery.

Stoves superseded these ancient methods of cooking early in this century. They provided for boiling, baking, frying, broiling and roasting. One can hardly realize in these days of labor-saving inventions and the almost automatic methods of cooking what it was to be a good cook two hundred or less years ago.

The first cooking stoves that the writer has found advertised were offered for sale in 1820. These were the Lawrence & Mellen stoves. The advertisement stated that, "The oven is so constructed that the fire passes entirely around so that they bake perfectly even in every part of the oven. They are calculated for the use of three boilers, which will do the cooking and washing of any common family; and the boilers are brought in contact with the fire, to the best possible advantage, so as to make a great saving of fuel; and they have the advantage of an open fire sufficient to roast by."

The following are engravings of two cooking stoves that were offered for sale in Salem in 1834.

At the same time Frothingham & Cross were selling the Pierpont Doric stove, for coal, at their store on Front street, in Salem.

In 1841, the same firm were selling Chilson's Improved Yankee Baker, which is so well remembered by our aged people.

THE YANKEE BAKER.

Three years later, Dr. Beriah Douglass' Patent Air-Tight cooking stove, shown herewith, was advertised. It burned wood or coal, and was warranted to save half of the amount of fuel consumed by other stoves. Lewis' Patent Improved cooking stove was also in use at that time.

In 1845, there was introduced into this county Stewart's Air-Tight cooking stove, shown herewith. It burned either wood or coal. This stove was awarded the silver medal, by the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association, at the fair in September, 1844, as the "best cooking stove."

In the same year, C. C. Doty was selling at his store in the Phenix building, corner of Front and Fish streets, in Salem, Shepard's new heating and cooking stove.

SHEPARD'S NEW STOVE.

The excrescence on the funnel was an oven for the storage of heat, which could be transferred to other rooms.

Then came into existence the stoves (of which the following, made in 1847, is one of the earliest styles) that the present generation know as old fashioned cooking stoves, such as the James, Atlantic, Hagar, etc.

THE WATCH OF THE WIVES.

Waiting and watching with tear-wet eyes
Till the last faint hope in the bosom dies;
While the waves crawl up o'er the chill white sand,
Those watchers long for a clasping hand,
And turn away with a thrill of pain,
But often pause to look again
From the rough dark rocks of the sea-beat shore,
For the gleam of snowy sails once more.

THE SHIPWRECK OF CAPT. EPHRAIM HOWE.

Edward Howe came from England, in the ship Truelove, in 1635, and settled in Lynn, Mass., where he was a lieutenant in the militia and representative in the general court. He died in April, 1639; and among his children was a son Ephraim who was born about 1626. Ephraim settled in New Haven, Conn., whence his elder brother Jeremiah had already emigrated. Ephraim became a sea-captain, and was engaged in sailing regularly, in a ketch, between New Haven and Boston, when the violent storm of September, 1676, prevailed.

Capt. Howe sailed from Boston on a return trip September 10th, having on board two of his sons, who were able seamen, two passengers and a boy. Contrary winds hindered them from doubling Cape Cod, and before they could do so the storm came upon them. They lost their rudder, and the vessel becoming uncontrollable they were carried out to sea.

Captain Howe became sick from exposure to wet and cold, but grew better. From a similar cause the oldest son died only eleven days after they had had their last glance at the hills of Cape Cod, and was buried in the sea. A few days later the other son fell a victim to exposure, and also died. The father felt his bereavement keenly, but, as he afterward said, their resignation and faith in Christ and their escape from a more terrible experience, which seemed certain to come, greatly consoled him.

Later, one of the passengers died, also from exposure. Only three were now left.

Winter was approaching, and something must be done. Should they attempt to reach the coast of New England, or the islands of the south? They prayed earnestly, and cast lots, which resulted in the decision to try and reach New England. They made a new rudder, and sailed westward.

Storm after storm swept over them, and cold, piercing and terrific winds rushed over the billows. Captain Howe, lashed to the helm, stood for even thirty-six hours at a time to keep the prow upon its course.

A month had passed since they had decided to attempt to reach New England, when their improvised rudder was lost. They were too hopeless to construct another, and for a fortnight the vessel drifted.

For three months they had not seen land, and seven weeks had elapsed since they concluded to attempt to reach the coast. One day they heard breakers, and felt a peculiar motion about the ketch. They were upon a reef, with the waves breaking violently around them. They afterwards discovered that they were on a sunken island off Cape Sable, Nova Scotia.

Over the foaming breakers leeward, they saw dreary rocks rising from the water, the spray flying over them. But for the hidden rocks, the vessel would probably have been dashed to pieces. They immediately dropped anchor and got out the boat. As the wind held off and the violence of the waves diminished, they put a few things into the boat, in which they successfully landed. Hardly had they done so when the ketch was stove to pieces, and a cask of powder, a barrel of wine and some other things came ashore.

To their dismay they found that they were on a desolate island, with neither man nor beast inhabiting it. Perishing of hunger seemed hardly preferable to dying at sea. They formed a shelter, and when that had become too dilapidated to shield them from the elements they made a cave. A gun or two came from the wreck. With the guns and ammunition they secured their sustenance by shooting the scarce gulls and crows, the only inhabitants of the island.

Food was so scanty that it was sparingly eaten; and at one time they were without anything for five days. They had become so accustomed to abstinence, however, that the stomach forgot its cravings.

The days dragged drearily. They constantly watched for vessels in the offing, not knowing that they were far from the course of commerce. They had been twelve weeks on the island when Mr. Augur, the passenger, died; and the boy followed a few days later, in April.

Alone, the days passed wearily to Captain Howe. The weather grew milder as spring came on, and he was more comfortable. He now noticed fishing vessels going to the Grand Banks, and vainly used every means he had to attract attention. At last his signal was seen; and from a vessel, belonging to Salem, a boat was sent to the island. With a heart full of joy at his deliverance he was received on the vessel, which arrived in Salem July 8, 1677, a few days after his rescue, ten months having elapsed since he sailed from Boston on his terrible trip. He returned to New Haven, where he was hardly recognized, being so much changed by his awful experience. He died Sept. 8, 1680, only three years after his deliverance, his death probably having been hastened by his sufferings.

EDITORIAL.

This number completes volume two of THE ESSEX ANTIQUARIAN. There have been published during the year the wills proved in Essex county from 1644 to 1647; the gravestone inscriptions in the present town of Andover before 1800; the genealogies of families from Acres to Allen; the record of the Essex county Revolutionary soldiers and sailors from Andrews to Averell; and abstracts of the old Norfolk county records from 1655 to 1659.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

DESCENDANTS OF JOHN FAIRMAN OF ENFIELD, CONN., 1683-1898. By Orrin Peer Allen. Palmer, 1898. John Fairman, or Firman, emigrated from Essex county to Enfield, Conn., about 1682. This pamphlet of 36 pages gives the genealogy of his descendants and much other interesting and valuable matter. Good indices of names are added. A portrait, in half-tone, of Prof. Charles Fairman, LL. D., is inserted as a frontispiece. Price, 75 cents; sent, postpaid, by the author, Palmer, Mass.

THE PILLSBURY FAMILY: William and Dorothy Pillsbury of Newbury and their Descendants. By David B. Pillsbury and Emily A. Getchell. Everett, Mass., 1898. Bound in half morocco, with gilt top, this new volume of 336 octavo pages is attractive enough for a table or gift book. The zeal, labor and taste of the compilers have produced a genealogy of more than average accuracy and completeness, the mechanical part of the volume being also excellent. Many biographical sketches and other interesting reading matter, and a good index, are included. The illustrations consist of nine steel and half-tone plates, the frontispiece being a view of Pillsbury Grange, Derbyshire, England. Three views of the ancient Pillsbury homestead in Newburyport, and six portraits, including those of Hon. A. E. Pillsbury and Parker Pillsbury, are given. Price, $4.00; to be had of Miss E. A. Getchell, at Newburyport.
